Lindy's First Commandment:

"We Have to Feel Positive About Ourselves."

By Lee Remmel
Editorial Director

Lindy Infante, long since immersed in his shakedown cruise as the tenth head coach in Green Bay's storied history, has the "big picture" sharply in focus.

To him, in the wake of frequent 18-hour workdays and careful analysis, the Packers' 1988 task is unmistakably clear.

"I think the main challenge now is for us to start feeling very good about ourselves, and very good about ourselves as a team," he says, mindful there is a mental parallel to the venerable maxim about being able to crawl before attempting to walk.

"We have to first learn to feel very positive about ourselves so we can go out and believe that we can win. I think the major challenge right now is that we start to create an image of ourselves and a feeling about ourselves that we can win any particular ball game that we play."

Basing his reading upon what he has gleaned from first-hand observations on the team's South Oneida Street practice field during two minicamps and an off-season workout program, the Packers' confident new leader senses the positive approach is burgeoning among his athletes.

"I believe that the players are enthused," he said. "At least they present that to me. I think they feel good about what we're trying to get done, and I think they feel good about the new coaching staff, and the guys they're having to work with as coaches."

Equally vital to success in this baptismal season is an appropriate response in the classroom.

A thoughtful Lindy Infante, pictured in his new Lambeau Field home, contemplates his baptismal season in Green Bay and what it may hold for him and the 1988 Packers.

The primary key, he says "is how fast we learn and master the things that we're trying to get done.

"I think that there's certainly some talent on this football team, and how well we settle into what we're doing and how quick we learn the things that we're doing is very important.

"Also," Lindy continued, touching upon another critical area, "I think how fast a quarterback emerges is important. If we are plugging along in the last week and a half of training camp and still haven't figured out who our quarterback's going to be, I think this will be a negative because we need to start getting that guy more turns than anybody else so that he can function in that first ball game against the Rams.

"There's a lot of factors, but I'd have to say that those are the major ones."

The wiry, graying Floridian, who from early on has impressed sideline observers with his teaching skills and football acumen, describes himself as optimistic about the learning process.

"I felt very good from the first camp to the second camp," he confided. "I think it was the first barometer of whether we were learning anything or not. I think there were a lot of players who left here after the first mini-camp and seemed to come back with a great deal of retention—remembered what we had told them in the first camp . . . were trying to do it.

"I feel pretty good about the knowledge phase of it at this point—at least where we are. We're nowhere near ready to play yet . . . We've got an awful lot of things to repeat and repeat and repeat to where we're reacting instead of thinking.

"We've still got a long way to go, but I think at least we've got the nuts and bolts and the ground work laid at this point."

Speaking of "groundwork," Infante says it is "far too early" to tell whether the Packers' offensive personnel can successfully execute his "multiple approach" offense.

"I said when I took the job I think the key to coaching is to be able to do things that your players can do best," he reminded. "It doesn't make any sense if you have some elaborate scheme and the players are not able to execute it, for whatever reason—whether it be mental deficiency or skill deficiency or whether it just be the fact that it's a new system and we haven't mastered it yet. We have to make sure that what we're doing is what the players can do best, and that means the coaches have to adapt more than the players.

"I think it's far too early for us to be able to say whether or not these players can do the things we'd like to do. I think we have to get into the season, get into training camp and find as we go on what we're effective with and what we're not. If we can't execute what we're trying to do, then we have to find something we can. But hopefully we'll be able to do a good portion of it anyway."

Elaborating upon his system, with which he produced a host of offensive and scoring records as offensive coordinator at both Cincinnati and Cleveland prior to joining the Packers, Infante says, "It's multiple in that we try to use a variety of formations. We use, one, two, three and four-wide receiver formations; we use two tight ends on occasion, a variety of motion and shifting and those types of things. And then we try to blend the run and the pass pretty much evenly.

"In Cleveland the last couple of years, there was just a handful of plays difference between our run and our pass ratio, and I would hope that we could create that here. If you get into a game where you're having to throw the ball too much, it generally means that you're behind and, hopefully, we can get into those games where we can keep a good blend on just about any down and have a good blend of run and pass."

Infante is well aware the Packers' major problem of late has been getting the football into the end zone, a difficulty underscored in 1987 when they finished 26th among the NFL's 28 teams in scoring.

But improvement in this area, he will tell you, is dependent upon more than increased productivity from the offense. It is, he insists, a cooperative effort.

"This goes directly back to how well you execute your offense and your defense," he said. "There's a lot that goes into scoring points. It's not just offensive football that scores the points; you have to be able to score on defense or be able to set scores up on defense by gaining good field position.

"It's amazing—if you draw a line down the middle of the football field at the 50-yard-line, it's amazing the percentage of points that are scored when you get the ball on the opponents' side of the 50 as opposed to when you get it on your side of the 50. It's almost like a magical barrier, if you would.

"Then special teams come into play here. Your special teams have to create field position and hopefully some points as you go down through the season. And your kicker has to kick field goals when you can't score.

"There's a lot of things that go into scoring a lot of points and it's usually a team idea as opposed to just offense."

As he went into training camp,

Infante admitted he was still attempting to pinpoint the strengths of his squad.

"I said going into the thing that I thought our offensive line was a strength offensively but, unfortunately, a vast number of those guys have not been in camp working with us because of contract negotiations, so that's still a question mark in my mind. I didn't get a chance to see as much of those guys as I would like to have.

"The same holds true with our receiving group, which is supposed to be a strong suit. But here again three of our top receivers have not been in camp working out with us. So there's a lot of mysteries, a lot of question marks in my mind at this point just simply because I haven't seen people.

"Our linebacker group is supposed to be the strength of our defense. I do think that in the draft we added some defensive linemen who are going to help this football team . . .But if I had to label a spot on defense, it probably would be our linebackers—in numbers."

Infante has little fault to find with the "resistance" as a whole.

"I think they played well last year," he notes. "If we can get the same—or better—production out of our defense that we got last year. . . I think our goal should be to end up somewhere around the top third of the league defensively. We were in the top half last year and even higher in some categories. If we can play that kind of sound defense, continue with the aggressiveness that the team displayed last year, I feel very good about our possibilities of having excellent defensive production."

With Hank Bullough, the celebrated "Doctor of Defense", presiding over this platoon, Lindy acknowledges the schemes are likely to be more complex and sophisticated than in the recent past.

"It should be a little bit more multiple in its approach," he admits, "but I think we have to be very careful that we're not doing too much to where we handcuff our guys to the point that they can't play. I think Hank and myself will be very conscious of how much we're retaining and how well we're performing the various things that he likes to do.

"It's kind of like the same philosophy we use offensively. The more the players display they can handle, the more we'll do . . . But we're not going to go overboard. There's a fine line to where you start to do too much and you lose your effectiveness and your efficiency."

As might be expected of one who has had the success he has had, offensively, Infante confirmed, "I'll be calling most all the plays.

"But the quarterbacks will have the ability to audible and change plays at the line of scrimmage, and things of this nature. So, even though I may call most all of them, many of them will be changed or the quarterback will select a different play based on what he's seen at that particular time.

"But," Infante appended, his droll sense of humor surfacing, "I'll be the guy to be blamed if we don't make a third-and-ten."

Lindy, incidentally, assures he has no concern "whatsoever" about serving as his own offensive coordinator.

"I've done it before—I did it in Jacksonville (when he was head coach of the USFL's Bulls in 1984-85), felt very comfortable with it. The guys that may not feel comfortable with it are the other offensive coaches because it's tough to have your head coach also be your coordinator—for a lot of reasons. You get caught up sometimes where you have to do a certain thing here and there, and you can't be in the offensive meeting room when you'd like to be, but I don't have any problem with it.

"There won't be any game we'll go into that we don't think we can win... We ought to be able to have something to say about who wins the championship..."

"I still feel that there's nobody—at least at the perimeter positions –right now that knows the offense as well as I do, just simply because it's something I've worked with for the last seven, eight years. And, until we get it all in, until I feel very comfortable stepping away from it, I'm going to continue to try to do both roles."

Although he has been a head coach before, Infante admits there are substantial differences between that Jacksonville experience and the assignment in which he now finds himself.

"This is obviously much more major league than the USFL," he says. "But a lot of the same decisions are having to be made, the same type of speaking engagements and public appearances are having to be made. There are an awful lot of similarities between this and the job I had in that respect.

"But this is a class act, this is a big-time football operation with an awful lot of great people and awful lot of fine organization, and the facilities are outstanding. And, obviously, the other place that I was at had absolutely no history and no tradition because it was brand new. This place, as I said before, kind of reeks with tradition and history, and it makes you feel very proud. It gives you goose bumps to walk around this place and realize you're walking on ground that some of the greats that have ever been involved in this game have walked, and it's quite exciting in that respect, where the other one was strictly a venture that was starting out on the ground floor.

"It's definitely the most exciting year of my life. I'm anxiously awaiting the upcoming season. Although," Lindy added with a wry smile, "I wish it was a year-and-a-half away so we could get everything done that we've got to get done. But I'm really excited about the upcoming season.

"I wake up at nights thinking about it," he confessed. "I wake up wondering how things are going to go; the apprehension, I guess, of what kind of football season we're going to have, and if I'm leaving any rock unturned that needs to be turned over and looked at . . . But this should be a very exciting time . . . It's already been one of the most exciting times of my life."

The same holds true with Stephanie, the lady of the house. "Unfortunately for her, she has not been up here to sense the excitement and the thrill of what's been going on," Infante noted. "I wish she could have been here with me to go through the things that have happened over the first four months, but she's anxiously looking forward to it.

"We talked to each other just about every night on the telephone and hardly a night went by that she didn't say, 'I wish I was up there to be going through this with you'. And I said, 'Believe me, there'll be plenty of things to be excited about as we get going' . . .But she's excited about it and so are the children (sons Brett,17, and Brad, 16, both enrolled at Green Bay's Southwest High School, where Brad will be competing for a running back position on the football team this autumn)."

With the latter in mind, Lindy also is already anticipating a rare opportunity—the chance to see Brad perform on the football field.

"I understand the high school teams play on Friday nights here in Green Bay—if I'm not mistaken—or Friday afternoons, whatever, and that'll work out great for me because Friday is the one night of the week you get a chance to relax a little bit, and, hopefully, I'll be able to get out to the games and see him play. Whereas in Ohio, they played on Saturday mornings and we (Infante was offensive coordinator of the Cleveland Browns the past two seasons) were in the middle of practice and I didn't get a chance to see but maybe five or six minutes of his games at that point . . . So I'm looking forward to getting out in the stands and second guessing the coaches (chuckles), and just basically having a good time relaxing and watching the kid play.

Arms folded and deep in thought, an intent Lindy Infante surveys the practice field scene before him as quarterbacks Robbie Bosco (6) and Blair Kiel (10) unwittingly mirror the head coach's pose.

As he zeroes in on his maiden season in Titletown, Infante continues to believe there is a good foundation from a personnel standpoint, and that a major overhaul is not indicated.

"I think there will be the natural replacement of players that you have on any football team," he acknowledges. "I think when you have the draft and you have free agents that are signed—and this team will be no different—I feel that we'll pick up some players that we've drafted that'll beat out some players that we had on the team last year.

"I certainly hope that there's a few that come in and make an impact. They may not be Pro Bowlers, and come in and start, but when I say make an impact, if they can come in and help us either in backup roles or they can come in and score some points, make some big plays—there's a lot of ways to make an impact on a football team, or just even be excellent special teams players. I think that there's a handful of guys in this draft that should come and be productive for us.

"But I don't see massive, wholesale changes. We'll just make it as competitive as we can and just wait to see who win spots in the various positions."

Heartened by the warmth of the reception he has been accorded, Infante senses strong support will be forthcoming from the faithful as he proceeds with this project.

"I don't know how it's been in the past but I know this: That the people I have met have been extremely supportive, extremely enthused about the upcoming season," he said. "They've been extremely kind to me. They seem to be very much wrapped up in this football team and feel like it's a part of them and they're a part of it, and I hope we can continue that feeling. I think that's important.

"We did our best in the off-season to get out and meet as many people as we could to let them know what we're all about because we are a new system and a new coaching staff, and every place I've been, I've been received well.

"But, as I've said many times," Lindy noted with a puckish grin "we haven't lost a game yet . . . I hope it doesn't change, but so far the fan support has been outstanding."

Asked if he might be counting upon the fans to be an in-stadium factor for this young team, Infante rejoined, "I would hope so. I would hope that the Green Bay stadium would be a place that teams would not like to come to play because of the crowd support. I know the crowds here have been very, very loyal to this football team. I hope we can give them something to cheer about.

"It usually helps if a team is out there playing well to get the crowd involved, but sometimes the team needs the crowd when things aren't going well, as well as when they are going well . . . and I would hope that the fans would stay behind us when things maybe don't look quite as good as they'd like on the field, that they'll continue to pull for us and root for us and make it as tough on the opposing football team as they can."

And the inevitable, the key question: Does he feel there is enough talent to win soon—as soon as this 1988 season?

"Trying to be the eternal optimist, I guess you'd say I feel that there won't be any game we'll go into that we don't think we can win. Whether we can win 'em and whether we'll have the players that'll fit the right slots, and whether we'll jell as a football team, I can't tell you.

"But I do think that we should be a competitive football team—and I do think we ought to be able to have something to say about who wins the championship in our division and goes on into the playoffs, and I hope it's us . . . And I feel very strongly that we have a a chance to do that."

Off the field

Lindy's No Couch Potato

By Don Langenkamp
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Another day in Lindy Infante's coaching career entering its 24th year is done, and the new Green Bay Packers head coach is finally home for a few hours of relaxation.

Maybe an hour or two of television with the feet propped up? Definitely not. "I don't watch a whole lot of television," says Infante.

Perhaps a book or a magazine in front of a quiet fire? Again, thumbs down. "Naw, I've never been a very good reader," Infante says in his self-deprecating fashion. "I kind of always wished I had dyslexia or something for an excuse. I hope it's something physical."

A sedentary, laid-back off-the-field existence isn't Infante's style. He's more of a doer than a watcher and his leisure-time tastes robustly reflect that. This 48-year-old Floridian's activities away from the job of coaching a professional football team reflect the offensive strategies he has become known for on the field–action, creativity, compact energy and intensity.

Perhaps these trademarks took seed 30 years ago when Infante had to improvise and scrape to gain what many take for granted–a relatively normal happy childhood. Or perhaps it's the nature of the coaching beast in the mayhem-filled world of pro football that moves him to high-level action when he's supposed to be taking it easy.

Whatever, Infante is the exact opposite of a classic couch potato. He finds himself extremely restless when trying to sit still for even a few hours.

"Football coaches do everything in heavy doses," he says. "You're either working 18-hour days or your vacations are very intense."

Vacation. Infante thinks of June traditionally the football coaches' month between mini-camps and training camps–and a small but prideful smile crosses his face as he nods toward a picture of an attractive beach house on his desk.

"That's our little place in the sun, so to speak," he says, not without affection. "For the last 20 years we've had this desire to have a house on the ocean. There's an area in North Florida we fell in love with way back when we were going to college and dating.

"Well, we couldn't afford a place right on the water so we bought one with a view of the ocean. Then two years ago we built a house right on the ocean. I drew the plans and did that old architecture bit. We had a contractor build it, but I've done a lot of the decking and landscaping."

The old architecture bit. It is the residue of a dream Infante once had of being an architect when he entered the University of Florida as a football scholarship freshman in 1959. He wanted to major in architecture but was talked out of it by a coaching staff fearful that excessive academic demands would erode the athletic skills of the halfback/ defensive back from Miami Senior High. Still, even after Infante switched to education, he managed to take enough building construction and architectural courses to gain the knowledge to design a house.

And decks, especially decks. Infante has become very adept at deck-building. The beach house halfway between Jacksonville and St. Augustine on the Atlantic Ocean is a testimonial to Infante's handiness.

"In that house I've built over 3,000 square feet of decks," he says, as his fingers curl around an imaginary hammer. "I think there's something special about building something with your own two hands and then stepping back and saying 'Hey, yeah, I did that.' There's a great deal of satisfaction to be derived from that.

"I'm no Johnny Appleseed, but everywhere I've been I've built some kind of a deck. I've left decks all over the country.

"I stay pretty busy down there. I'll sit out there for a couple of hours and then I go crazy and grab a hammer or something and find something to do–something to fix, something to build, add a shower, something."

It may be that personality trait was born of necessity long ago when Infante felt the constant pressure of doing something to keep his juvenile life on track while growing up in Miami. His parents divorced when he was eight and his mother died of cancer when he was in junior high. Infante's life wasn't exactly the pits, but it wasn't a duplicate of the "Brady Bunch", either.

"I moved in with my sister who was 11 years older than me," Infante says. "She had two younger kids, so she was kind of half a sister and half a mother, really."

Infante was one of those classic "maybe he'll make it, maybe he won't" kids at junior high age. Some of his peers were, as he puts it, "a pretty rough group," and others were involved in more wholesome activities such as sports.

"I got started in sports kind of late," he says. "I was one of those guys who wasn't exactly sure where I was going. I didn't get involved in Little League or anything like that.

"I really attribute the Boys Club for my early involvement. One day I went over there with another guy and got to talking with one of the coaches. Well, one thing led to another and I ended up getting involved in football, which without a doubt was the best thing that ever happened to me because it got me off the fence about which way I was going."

Infante never really got to the all-around athlete stage. "I played a little Boys Club basketball because at that age I was the biggest kid on the block," he says with a laugh. "I grew up early and quit growing early."

He grew up early in other ways, too. Infante worked at a number of jobs while going through high school with average grades and exceptional football accomplishments. He parked cars at a hotel, worked in his father's tile business, worked as an electrician's apprentice and sold newspapers on street corners.

"We didn't have a lot of money, obviously, because of the separation and then my father's business finally went under," Infante says. "I did a lot of things but thank God a scholarship came along or I would never have gone to Florida.

It was a life-bending move. Infante met his future wife, Stephanie, while a college student and they were married after he graduated, had a brief encounter in pro football and took a teaching and coaching job at his alma mater, Miami Senior High.

Infante's two sons, Brett and Brad, a high school senior and junior, respectively, obviously have had a smoother upbringing than their dad's. Like most contemporary American families, the Infantes try to do things together–not totally successfully.

"Well, first of all, my two boys have totally different interests," Infante says. "And that makes it tough on a parent. My older boy likes to play golf but my younger boy likes to ride dirt bikes. So at one time I had a motorcycle and we'd go out in the woods one day and the next day I'd play golf."

But there is the occasional Colorado ski trip and, of course, the June vacation in Florida. Oh, and there is football–at least with Brad, who will be a junior at Green Bay Southwest High School this fall.

He was on the junior varsity last season in the Cleveland area and his dad scrambled to watch his son play.

He dressed for the varsity games but he didn't play much, so I didn't see much of him at the Friday night varsity games, "Infante says. "So he'd play on the jayvees on Saturday mornings and, unfortunately, it was right when we had our Saturday practice. So I'd jump in the car and catch the last five minutes of the game."

It fits into the Infante lifestyle –slightly frantic and certainly energetic. For the new Packers coach, it definitely beats putting the feet up and staring at a television.

THE QUARTERBACK?

IT'S COMPETITIVE

By Bud Lea
Milwaukee Sentinel

The new season prompts the old question: Who's the quarterback?

Could this be a new start for Randy Wright?

Is this the year Don Majkowski sprouts wings and takes full charge?

Could ex-Raider field general Marc Wilson, an eleventh-hour addition to the competition, be the long-sought answer?

Will Robbie Bosco finally be able to show he has an arm and can play in the National Football League?

Does Bud Keyes, a 10th-round draft choice from the University of Wisconsin, have the stuff to compete for a job?

What about free agent Blair Kiel? Will he be rags-to-riches story?

Is this really a wide-open race?

Well, it is, according to Lindy Infante, new head coach of the Green Bay Packers. No one is No. 1. The decision will be made in training camp.

Infante knows something about quarterbacks. He is the man who helped the Cleveland Browns and quarterback Bernie Kosar get two consecutive American Football Conference title games.

"The ideal situation in the National Football League, or at any level, is to have an incumbent starter," says Infante. "If you're with the Browns, there is no discussion going on who the quarterback is, so they can gear everything towards that.

"I won't know until we put the pads on here. We'll give everyone equal time in the early part of training camp and let these guys show what they can do."

This will be Wright's fifth year with the Packers. He is the veteran of the group, and under normal circumstances this would put him in the driver's seat.

But Wright, who had improved steadily in 1986, got off to a slow start last season, the result of a 15-day contract holdout. He quickly discovered that nothing recedes like success.

In last year's league opener against the Los Angeles Raiders, Wright completed just 8 of 21 passes for 99 yards, and he had three passes intercepted—one for a touchdown. The Raiders romped over the Packers, 20-0, and Wright, who had been on the brink of acceptance, had missed a golden opportunity.

The next game against the Denver Broncos, Coach Forrest Gregg switched quarterbacks. He handed the ball to Majkowski, the 10th-round draft choice from Virginia, and said, "Be good, kid, please be good."

The Broncos were coming off a smashing 40-17 victory over Seattle that had put quarterback John Elway onto the cover of Sports Illustrated. Denver was an overwhelming 10-point favorite to beat the Packers.

On a rainy September Sunday in Milwaukee County Stadium, Majkowski made his NFL debut by helping the Packers pull off a 17-17 overtime tie with the Broncos. He completed 10-of-20 passes for 121 yards and one touchdown.

More importantly, Majkowski did not put the Packers in a position to lose while playing in horrible weather conditions. He threw no interceptions, while Elway was intercepted three times.

The rookie from Virginia had sent a message concerning who he was and what he could do.

When the regulars resumed play five weeks later after settlement of the players strike, Majkowski picked up where he had left off. In his second pro start, he had a hot hand in the comfort of the Pontiac Silverdome. He passed for 323 yards, and the Packers needed every bit of that performance to defeat the Detroit Lions, 34-33, after blowing a 24-0 lead.

Now, they were calling Majkowski, the 14th quarterback taken in the draft, a real steal. However, nobody knew how far Majkowski could take the Packers.

The answer came the following week at Milwaukee. On a day many expected the Packers to take a step forward and come of age, they regressed and lost to the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, 23-17, an opponent they figured to beat.

Majkowski struggled. He fumbled on the first possession to set up a Tampa Bay touchdown. He looked what he was—a rookie quarterback.

Wright replaced Majkowski, and many of the 50,308 fans at County Stadium booed when Wright entered the game late in the third quarter. The same people were cheering when Wright rang up 17 points in a sparkling relief performance.

The decision was made to start Wright the next game against the Chicago Bears in Lambeau Field. Taking full advantage of the move, Wright established himself as the team's No. 1 quarterback again.

He generated 298 passing yards on 20-of-41 completions and became the first Packer quarterback not to throw an interception against the Bears since 1979. However, this superb performance went for naught as Bear kicker Kevin Butler booted a 52-yard field goal as time expired to hand the Packers a 26-24 defeat.

It was a loss the Packers had trouble accepting.

In the next two games, Wright's grip on the starting quarterback job weakened as the result of five interceptions and no touchdowns. Wright lost his assignment in a 20-10 loss to the Giants, and Majkowski started the last game at New Orleans.

The offense sputtered last season. So, who got all the blame? The quarterbacks.

It wasn't all the quarterbacks' fault. The running backs and the receivers can share the blame for the Packers third-place finish last year. The team's offense ranked 22nd in rushing, 25th in passing, and 26th in scoring in union games.

Now that the starting quarterback job has been declared wide open by Infante, Majkowski is confident, Wright isn't talking, Wilson is realistic, and Bosco feels his time has arrived.

"It's wide open, and that's the only fair thing they can do," says Majkowski. "It's a new coaching staff, and they have to evaluate the players according to their ratings, not anybody else's.

"It's a new system, and that involves a lot of learning. Whoever comes out on top remains to be seen. As long as I have a fair and equal chance, that's all I want.

"I had my ups and downs last year, but it was an experience I won't trade for anything. There was a lot of mental pressure. Now I think I will handle it a lot better."

Wright won't have to undergo the agony of holding out this season and missing much needed time to learn a new system. He signed a one-year contract in May.

Wilson, physically comparable to the Browns' Kosar at 6-foot-5 and 205 pounds, is the most experienced of the six aspirants for the job, having compiled a solid 31-19 record as a Raider starter.

The nine-year pro, a mobile and strong armed signal caller who has demonstrated an ability to go deep for quick strikes in the Raider tradition, takes a logical approach to his chances of emerging No. 1.

"It's a competitive situation," he says. "There were no promises made, and I didn't expect there to be. When I played with the Raiders, all I wanted was a competitive situation, a chance to be the starting quarterback. That's all I want in Green Bay."

Bosco has been the Packers' quarterback of the future ever since he was drafted in the third round out of Brigham Young in 1986. But he hasn't played a lick for the Green Bay Packers because of injuries.

The injured shoulder that guaranteed heartbreak is finally sound. Bosco had the same shoulder surgery that Jim McMahon of the Bears had, and by the same surgeon, Frank Jobe.

But does Bosco have a major-league arm?

"I think my arm is good enough to play in this league," Bosco says. "It's nothing like John Elway's or someone who throws the ball like that.

"I can do everything I need to do. The more I'm throwing, the better I'm feeling. I don't have to hold back at all. I'm ready to throw with these guys."

There is no pressure on Bosco. Not yet.

The fans don't expect anything from him. Nor does the media, which has written him off.

"I'm expecting to get my chance to play," Bosco says. "And when I do get that chance, I expect to be on top of my game and perform the way I know I can."

Lindy Infante is ready to play a round of "Name That Quarterback." It may be a slow process, but these quarterbacks are now in good hands. Infante will coach the quarterbacks.

He doesn't expect this thing to develop into a quarterback controversy. The new coach wants to develop and pick his starter during the exhibition season and then go with him.

The job, as he says, is wide open.

Andy's At The Top

Eleven-year veteran John Anderson (59) is now the senior member of the 1988 Packers in terms of Packer service.

By Dale Hofmann
Milwaukee Sentinel

The last time John Anderson wasn't a Green Bay Packer, Robert Parins was a fulltime circuit judge, there were no luxury boxes at Lambeau Field, and the indoor practice facility was a patch of turf across the street.

Bart Starr was the coach, Lynn Dickey the quarterback and John Brockington the designated backfield horse.

Linebackers? There were three pretty good ones named Carter, Carr and Weaver.

Anderson remembers all of those things, and it might be fun to talk about them once in awhile to some of the other guys on the team who remember them too. Except that there aren't any guys like that.

The last of them left at the end of last year when Ezra Johnson was not invited back. When you look at those charts that say "How the Packers were built," John Anderson has a line all to himself. And it's at the very top.

This kind of stuff could get seriously depressing for a veteran player who graduated from college while more than half of his teammates were still in junior high. It could also get in the way.

But anybody who thinks the Packers' 11th-year linebacker is looking backwards or resting on his laurels doesn't know John Anderson. And anybody who doesn't know John Anderson is missing something.

He is one of the most personable and articulate players the Packers have ever had, and one of the most involved. The state's charitable causes would be considerably poorer if the team hadn't decided to use a first-round draft choice on this former academic All-American out of the University of Michigan in 1978.

If it seems like he's been around even longer than that, it's because he has. A former Waukesha High School star, he first made Milwaukee area football fans aware of him when he won the state Pass, Punt and Kick competition.

Maybe that's why it seems hard to believe he's only 32.

"They're going to have to come up with something different to describe me than 'elder statesman'," says Anderson. "Fortunately we have Dave Brown, too, and he's been around longer than I have. He's the real elder statesman. I've just been here longer than anybody else.

"I'll admit I laughed when I looked at the 'how they were built' chart the team sent out in its prospectus. It's kind of funny to see yourself at the top.

"I don't know how much I've slowed down, or if I have slowed down at all. But I won't take it for granted that that happens. Maybe it does, but I'm not just going to accept it."

If it does, it hasn't showed yet. After missing most of the 1986 season with a broken ankle, Anderson settled right back into his customary left outside linebacker position in '87, and opponents settled back into their customary practice of looking somewhere else for big yardage. He was the team's second-leading tackler with 65 solo stops and a steadying influence on one of the league's most promising young defenses.

"If I had to pick a spot on the defense that was the strongest area, I would have to say it is our linebacking group," said Coach Lindy Infante. "Anderson plays very heady football, has the instincts that the outside linebackers have to have in reference to playing on the tight ends and on the outside of the line of scrimmage. I look for him to have another fine year."

Infante is the third Packer coach to look for that from Anderson, and none of them has been disappointed. Anderson truly has nothing left to prove anymore, but he's still trying to prove it anyway.

The best way he knows to do that is with deeds rather than words. But he also recognizes that both are required from a veteran on a youthful team.

"Your role does change," Anderson said. "I'm just not a rah-rah kind of guy, but if something needs to be said, I will stand up and say it. People do look to you for some direction because you have been around longer. I try to be selective, though.

"You have to be sure you don't get carried away with that kind of thing and start thinking that the way you play is any less important. It isn't. As soon as I start thinking of myself as the team guru or something, and my production falls off, I'm in trouble."

So come July, Anderson will not be sitting around camp cross-legged or any other way dispensing calm advice to eager youngsters. He approaches his 11th pro camp coach in the same manner that he approached the first ten. His weight, pace and preparation have been remarkably consistent.

Well, his weight is up about seven pounds, which comes to slightly less than 2 1/2 pounds per coach. Infante became his third coach this winter, and that adds a little excitement to the proceedings. When the subject is training camp, the proceedings could stand some excitement.

"Practice gets old," Anderson acknowledged, "but games never do. Two-a-days are just part of the grind. The only guy I ever knew who said he liked two-a-days was Johnnie Gray, and I'm not even sure I can believe him.

"When you have been around the block, you do have a knowledge of what it takes to get ready and what kind of shape you have to be in. Fortunately, I found that out early. I've discovered a regimen that works for me. As long as I'm healthy, I can go into camp knowing I'm in shape.

"There is a little more excitement this year than in other years bcause of the new coach. People are curious. I really don't have much idea of what to expect. I'm looking forward to it. It will be a feeling out process for both of us, but I've heard good things about what he can do with an offense. And I was impressed by the things he said after he got the job."

It's Anderson, of course, who will have to make the impression. He and 44 other guys. He did it for Starr and his staff when he moved right into a starting job as a rookie, and he did it for Forrest Gregg. This isn't really new. Not much is when you have been doing business at the same stand for a decade.

"It took me five years to learn to play my position," said Anderson. "I think you learn something every year, but there are only so many ways they can block your position. Once you learn those, you have to be careful that you stay alert, that nobody catches you falling asleep out there.

"I can't say whether I'm at the top of my game or not. One season kind of melts into another. I've always had a hard time deciding about those things—whether this one was a great year or that one wasn't so great.

"I've never paid much attention to statistics anyway. But I think mine have probably been pretty consistent as far as tackles and that kind of thing are concerned."

There are some things Anderson wouldn't mind seeing change in the season to come. A little more quiet on the strikes and scandals front wouldn't hurt. And a vast improvement in the won-lost department would be very welcome.

"It will certainly help this year to have the distractions gone," said Anderson. "I don't know how much that stuff affected us, but I know it impacted negatively on the fans.

"Winning takes care of a lot of things, though. Whether that's right or wrong, it's true. If we get off to a good start, I know a lot of people who have been pulling for us for a very long time. They'll be right there with us."

Anderson has made plans to be a part of that as soon as it happens. He signed a new series of three, one-year contracts with the Packers that takes him through the 1989 season, and there's no particular reason to believe that will be his last deal with the club.

He has looked past his playing career, though. In fact, he's looked in several different directions, doing some off-season real estate work, some banking and quite a bit of broadcasting on a Milwaukee radio station.

The airwaves intrigue Anderson, but he wants to get seriously involved in the business only if he's sure he can do it well.

"I saw some things I enjoyed and some I didn't really enjoy," he said. "I wanted to find out what it was all about, and I discovered it's not quite as easy as some people can make it look. There are a lot of people around who do just an average job, and I include myself among them.

"There are a few who have a real talent for it. I have to decide if that's something I can develop. I haven't answered that question yet. I guess you could say I'm still looking for that post-playing career."

First, though, is some unfinished business in his playing career, and Anderson is not at all interested in the average where that's concerned.

"I've been here ten years and in the playoffs only once," he said. "I really want to finish on a high note. The winning, that's what I'll remember."

From the Packer fans' point of view, there hasn't been nearly enough of that. But it hasn't been John Anderson's fault. And when he does leave the team, they'll be a long time forgetting him.

All Frankie Needs Is Discipline

By Tom Oates
Wisconsin State Journal

As Frankie Neal boarded a jet in Florida he was proud of the fact that he weighed 207 pounds. His employers, the Green Bay Packers, had been concerned about his off-season weight. They would be pleased. Half a day later though, as Neal stepped onto a scale in Green Bay, he weighed 211 pounds.

"People think I'm joshing them, but when I left (for the Packers' mini-camp), I was weighing 207 pounds," Neal said. "I ate in two airports. Detroit and Milwaukee. Hot dogs and V-8 Juice. I got on the scale in Green Bay and I was weighing 211 pounds. I don't really know how I did that."

Obviously, discipline does not come easily for Frankie Neal, the Packers' talkative, colorful second-year wide receiver.

It may be the only thing that doesn't come easily for Neal. Catching a football is as natural as breathing. So is running, cutting and jumping. And, of course, talking. Discipline is not. Off the football field or on.

"He's got all of this gifted ability," said Tom Braatz, the Packers' executive vice president of football operations. "He just has to discipline himself to run the correct routes, to be where he's supposed to be."

Neal readily admits that the key to a potentially brilliant National Football League future is discipline. Yet, in some ways, the day-to-day mechanics of the word mystify him.

He knows he has to curb his appetite. He knows he has to study the Packer playbook more than he did as a rookie. He knows he has to run the proper patterns and not freelance as much. He knows he has to get serious.

After a rookie season in which occasional flashes of brilliance were interspersed with long periods where he was missing in action, Neal knows it is all up to him.

"Me being the type of guy that I am, which I'm trying to work around, I didn't use (my talent) in the right ways," he said. "I knew I had all this talent. It's no secret. Either you've got talent or you don't. I knew the Lord blessed me with an abundance of talent, to the point where I could neglect opening up the playbook and still get by with flying colors. I'm blessed to have these things, but the way I used them last year, well, I could have used them a lot better."

Neal considers his rookie year a learning experience. Coming as he did from a year of finishing school at Fort Hays (Kan.) State, Neal was unsophisticated in the complexities of the pro game and the lifestyle of a highly paid athlete.

It wasn't a matter of not wanting to do the right thing, Neal insists. Rather, it was a matter of not knowing what to do.

"I'm not a lazy person at all," he said. "When it's time to work, I'll be the first one out there to work. But I think it's a process that you have to go through. It's a part of your growing. It's not something that I was reluctant to do, it was something I had to learn."

Neal hopes knowledge will breed success, and fame. Neal wants fame. Craves it, in fact. Unlike most people, though, Neal has fame within his reach. He has uncommon athletic ability, enough to become a marquee name in the NFL. And he doesn't shy away from challenges. At the University of Florida, where he played for three seasons, he took Chris Collinsworth's number. In Green Bay, he wears James Lofton's old jersey.

"I want to be one of the best in this business," he said. "I guess fame naturally comes along with that. That's just my personality. I'm an outgoing type. It's something I've always thought about since I was a little kid. That's what I'm striving for."

Because Neal is outgoing, reporters and fans love him. Reporters, in fact, may be his biggest fans. In interviews, Neal is talkative and not afraid to say what's on his mind. Fans love him because he makes big plays and occasionally plays to the crowd.

Frankie Neal on Frankie Neal: "Playing in professional football, that's what I live and die for."

But lest someone think Neal's act is phony, rest assured that he is much the same when no one is watching. On the practice field and in the locker room Neal is always talking, jiving, high-fiving and generally showing enthusiasm.

"Playing in professional football, that's what I live and die for. The fans, the reporters, that's a lot of the fun in it as far as I'm concerned," Neal said.

Neal backed up some of his brash talk as a rookie, but not all of it. The 6-foot-1, 205-pounder was the Packers' nickel receiver, playing behind Phillip Epps and Walter Stanley. He was used mainly in passing situations. Nevertheless, Neal finished second on the team with 36 catches, the most by a Packer rookie since Lofton in 1978.

It wasn't Neal's season-long act that drew rave reviews, however. It was the highlight reel. In an exhibition game against the Cincinnati Bengals, Neal caught 10 passes for 151 yards, including a spectacular one-handed grab on a toss down the middle. Neal's regular-season highlight was a two-touchdown effort against Kansas City. One of the catches, an over-the-shoulder grab between two defenders at the goal line, was an absolute scene-stealer.

Neal said the highlight film could have been longer had the quarterbacks looked his way more often.

"In those two games I was put on the spot," he said. "They came my way and I rose to the occasion. That's basically what happened. I was put on the spot not one time in a quarter, but four or five times in a quarter and I rose to the occasion and good things came about."

Neal would like to be a regular this season, promising "bigger and better things" if he is. He is unconcerned that the Packers made South Carolina wide receiver Sterling Sharpe their top pick in the draft.

"Competition will bring out the best in Frankie Neal," he said.

His quarterbacks might say discipline will bring out the best in Neal. They found Neal an inviting receiver last year, what with his height and good hands, but only when they knew where he was. Neal had a tendency to break off routes too short or break out of his pattern and run deep if he saw wide-open spaces. "Old habits die hard," Neal said.

"I'm a street ballplayer," he added. "It's in me, that street aspect of it, that run-where-they-ain't attitude. I heard that when I was a little boy. I remember some guy making that statement and it stuck with me. That's the discipline part of the game I've got to work on, staying within the offense and doing what I've got to do to hold up my end of the deal."

In college, where Neal was often the primary receiver, quarterbacks had a chance to track him throughout a play. In the high-tech NFL, the quarterbacks didn't have that luxury. They could only afford one glance his way. If Neal wasn't where he was supposed to be, they looked elsewhere.

"You're used to doing what you want to do and such great things happening from it," Neal said. "At this level, it is so highly technicalized that 2 yards can mean a world of difference. That's basically what the thing was with my routes. I would break them a little short to get more open. . . It was throwing off the chemistry and I couldn't see that. It took them the longest time to explain to me that I was causing the whole offense a problem by doing that."

A problem that went largely unreported last season was Neal's weight. Normally, gaining weight during the season is as tough as losing it in the off-season. Somehow, Neal did it. His weight crept above 215 pounds during the season.

"I was getting the most work in and my body was supposed to be in its best shape and I went to gaining weight," said Neal. "For what reason, I don't know."

Uh, how about overeating?

That's basically it," Neal said. "When I'm in Florida I can eat the way I want to and go out in the hot sun and work it all off and then some. But when I'm up here it's a totally different thing. You can eat and you're not going to work as much off because of the differential in the humidity and temperature."

The Packers would like Neal to play at 198 pounds. Neal would settle for 205, his weight at Florida.

"I would say that when I was quick, fast and could hurt some people play after play, I was right at 205 pounds," he said. "I played at that my sophomore year in college and I was quick as a cat. I'm going to try to get back to that. If I get back to that, there's going to be some things happening."

Neal believes the table is set for good things to happen anyway.

"From a personal standpoint, I was satisfied to a certain extent about last year," Neal said. "But the thing that stands out the most in my head that I accomplished was growing as an individual. I didn't realize how much growing up I had to do as as individual until I got here. It was a rude awakening, what makes a person tick. From day to day, what you have to do to maintain. I didn't know how much I had to grow in that area. I think that's what I accomplished the most last season. As far as the football field goes, I did some things. I think I touched on some of my talents. The Packer fans haven't seen half of what I'm capable of doing. The best is yet to come."

Johnny's A Gem

By Rob Schultz
Madison Capital Times

Since Johnny Holland always revered Los Angeles Raiders' running back Marcus Allen, the Green Bay Packers' rookie linebacker was slightly nervous about their first meeting in the 1987 season opener.

Would a handshake do?

Definitely not.

How about, "How ya' doing, Marcus?"

That's not cool, so he wouldn't settle for that either.

Holland wanted to make a formidable first impression. He got his chance early in the game as Allen awaited a screen pass from Raiders' quarterback Rusty Hilger.

Allen caught the ball and went splat. As the former all-pro running back scraped himself off the soft Lambeau Field turf, he looked up to see who hit him with such monstrous force.

It was Holland. Allen just found out how the young linebacker preferred to say hello in the National Football League.

As it turned out, Holland said hello to the rest of the NFL in just as auspicious of a style. It didn't take long for Packer opponents to learn that this savvy inside linebacker from Texas A&M had the quickness and strength to become a force in the league for a long time.

The Packers' second-round draft pick in 1987 earned league all-rookie honors last year from United Press International and was the team's defensive rookie of the year after making 60 tackles, two interceptions, one sack and a pass deflection.

Plaudits still are coming in long and loud for the 6-foot-2, 221-pound Texan. Tom Braatz, the Packers' vice president of football operations, may have uttered the biggest kudos of all.

"If we had 22 football players on and off the field like Johnny Holland, this team would be a playoff team," Braatz said.

"He came in as a rookie and lived up to what he was projected to be. His work habits, his leadership, the things he did for the community all come to mind. He's special."

If you're wondering whether all that success has gone to Holland's head, think again. Such thoughts are mumbled by those who don't know him.

Holland's mind already is forging ahead to his encore performance. That was clear as he came to the Packer practice field in May to attend the team's first mini-camp under new coach Lindy Infante.

"I have to improve," Holland kept saying. "I want to correct my mistakes. That's why I'm anxious to get back."

There's also a hint of superstition: Holland doesn't want to fall prey to the dreaded sophomore slump.

"That happens easily after a good rookie year because it's so easy to relax," he said. "I don't want to relax. I want to work harder. It's always in the back of your mind that you can relax, but I'll refuse the temptation. I know what I have to do. I've thought about that the entire offseason. There will be no excuses. I'm not a rookie anymore."

The Power To Be Your Best™

If Holland has developed one solid trait with the Packers, it's his work ethic. There are few more tireless workers on the team.

Despite his young age, Holland, 23, has been working at the same hard pace for many years. The pace was set when, as a youth, he envisioned himself as the NFL's next great quarterback.

Growing up in Hempstead, Texas, just outside of Houston, Holland was the youngest of eight children. Right from the start there was little doubt about who the athlete was in the family.

Holland became the starting quarterback at his high school as a freshman and earned all-district honors by his senior year.

Hotly pursued by dozens of colleges, Holland chose the nearby Aggies. But he quickly learned there was no room for him there as a quarterback.

He didn't want to be red-shirted, so he played safety as a freshman and moved to linebacker as a sophomore.

The transition was tough. Weighing just 200 pounds at the time, Holland was pushed around easily. That's when his work habits helped him the most, and he quickly built his strength and technique. His training schedule hasn't changed much today.

"I give my family credit for getting me to work hard," said Holland, who is still close to every member of his family. "They taught me to accept challenges, to always do my best.

"When I was younger, I got pushed around a lot. I think my brothers got me to work harder to succeed. They told me you can't necessarily always be the best, but you can always try your best."

They also taught him to bank on academics, not a football career, to get through life. Holland is closing in on a degree in business management at Texas A&M.

"Five members of my family are electrical engineers. In college, they'd call every day and they'd never talk about football. They just wanted to know how I was doing in class."

Holland paused, then smiled. One of his happier moments was when he left college for Green Bay. "Now we don't talk about class anymore when I call them every day," he said, feigning relief. "Now we just talk about football."

Holland speaks quietly, politely. Throughout his rookie year, he preferred to stay out of the limelight when off the field. He let his actions on the field do his talking for him.

Once again, that's the Holland-family way. "You learn those things in a big family. My parents had a big influence on me in those respects," he said. "They taught me to be polite, be respectful, treat people like you want to be treated."

But he forgets all that on the football field.

"I really get a chance to get rid of my frustrations on a football field," he explained. "By Sunday, a lot of times, it's really built up.

"So I guess I become a different person on the field. I don't have to be polite. I just look at the challenge ahead of me and accept it.

"You see, I'll do anything it takes to win. I like the challenge every Sunday of going out and playing hard and, when I leave the field, I can look back and say to myself, 'I did my best.'"

Holland's best was good enough to earn him a starting job during the early part of last year's preseason. But Holland didn't begin to feel comfortable until after the players' strike ended.

"That's when I felt like I was part of the team; that I could help the team," he said. "As the season wore on, I learned a lot more. Just being around the guys I played with, the linebackers, helped me."

At Texas A&M, Holland was known as "Mr. Anywhere" because of his propensity to go sideline to sideline to make tackles. "I took pride in that, being wherever the ball is. But in the NFL you have to take care of your own responsibility first and I couldn't do that as much here," he said.

And, despite smacking Allen in that first game as a professional, Holland said he didn't make as many big hits as he wanted to as a rookie.

"I love to be wild on the field," said Holland, his eyes widening at the thought. "I should have had a lot of big hits, but I was thinking about the play instead of just reacting. This year is going to be different. I'm looking to make some knock-out hits just from reaction."

Holland is not looking for more individual awards in his future with Green Bay. He said that's not as important as winning.

He also said he didn't suffer from culture shock when he first came to Green Bay. Although he lives in Houston and loves a big-city atmosphere, he enjoys Green Bay because he can concentrate on just football. It reminds him of Hempstead.

"I learned what it meant to be a Packer, and I felt honored," he said. "And so it hurt me when I felt we weren't getting any respect from teams before games. They thought we were a free lunch."

Holland wouldn't accept that. "I learned about winning at Texas A&M. You have to spread it like a disease. That's what we have to do here. I can't accept other teams looking at Green Bay on their schedule and figuring us to be an easy game.

"I can't accept going home like I did last year and having people come up to me and say, 'You play for Green Bay and they had a bad year last year.' I don't want to go home again next year and have people tell me we have a sorry team."

Holland's eyes grow wide again as he thinks about losing. It's like he's eyeing a quarterback who is ripe to be sacked.

"We're not a sorry team, I can guarantee that," he said. "I won't accept Green Bay as a team that presents an easy game for somebody. I don't want to be no homecoming team. I can't handle that."

Holland envisions the Packers to spring on the NFL this year, just like he did as a rookie last year. "That would be the perfect scenario," he said.

And that brings us back to Holland's big hit on Allen. "Aw, he just didn't see me coming," Holland said.

But like a speedy freight train churning down the tracks, everyone sees Holland coming now. And it doesn't appear as if anyone, or anything, will derail him.

A perspiring Holland readies for a return to combat.

THE ASSISTANTS

GOOD COACHES, GOOD PEOPLE

By Jim Egle
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Upon being hired as the 10th head coach in Green Bay Packers' history in early February, Lindy Infante began his first task: assembling a staff.

The selection of assistant coaches doesn't attract attention the way major trades or draft picks do. But Infante, a long-time assistant coach in the National Football League, emphasized building a staff at his first press conference as coach. It would be an important factor in the team's success, Infante said.

By February 25th, the process was complete. Infante's staff included:

- Hank Bullough, 54, defensive coordinator/ linebackers.
- Greg Blache, 38, defensive line.
- Charlie Davis, 43, offensive line.
- Buddy Geis, 41, receivers.
- Dick Jauron, 37, defensive backs.
- Virgil Knight, 40, tight ends/strength & conditioning.
- Dick Moseley, 54, outside linebackers.
- Willie Peete, 50, running backs.
- Howard Tippett, 49, special teams coordinator.

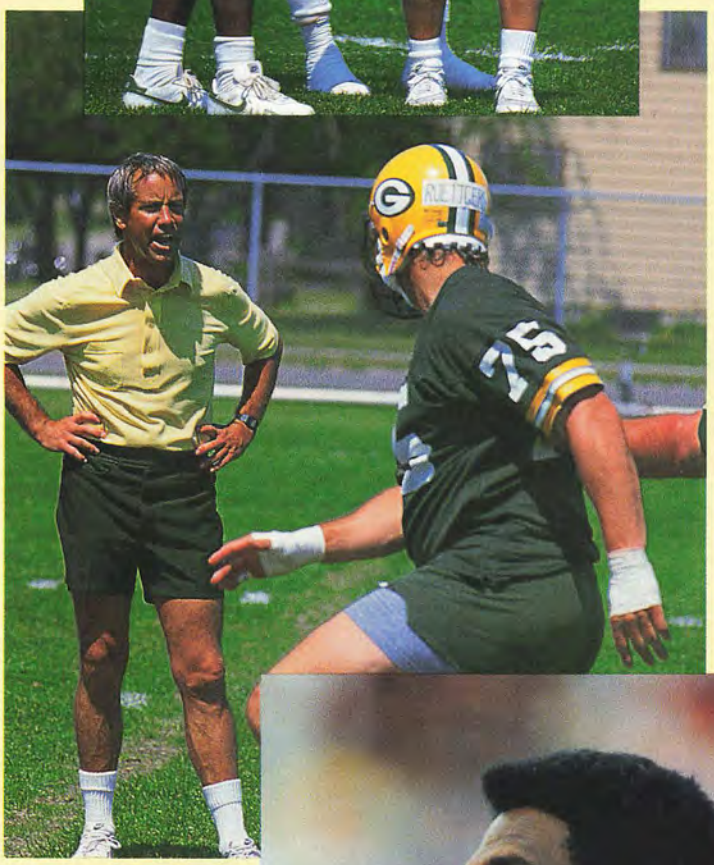
"To be successful, it takes a combination of everything working together," Infante said. "If you've got good players and don't have a good coaching staff, you're not going to be successful.

"The assistant coaches are every bit as important as the head coach or any other position on the team. If one guy isn't coaching as good as he should, the team will be weaker."

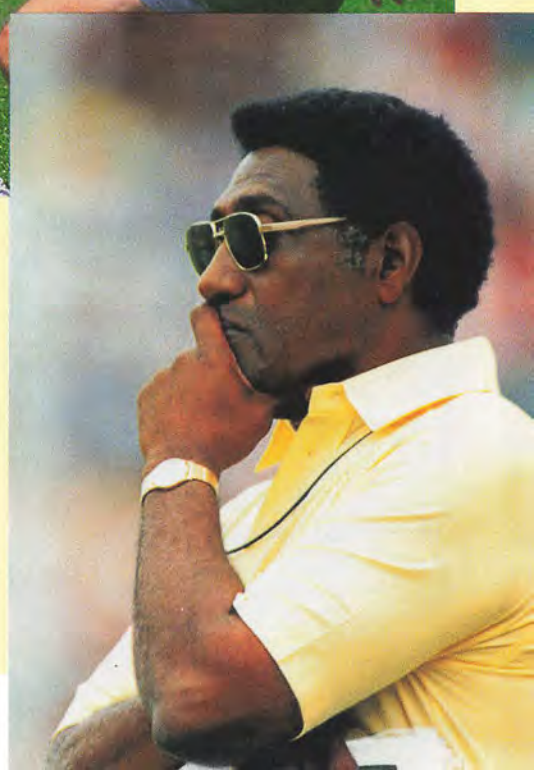
Infante said he used three criteria in judging applicants for the coaching jobs. First, of course, was knowledge of the game of football.

"Second, I was looking for guys who would be good teachers, who could communicate," Infante said. "You don't have to be best friends with every player, but we do have to be able to talk on a one-to-one basis.

"Last, but not least, I wanted good people, guys who can work well with other people, fit into your community. They're people you'd like to call your neighbors, like to call your friend. I don't think I have anyone who doesn't fit all three categories.

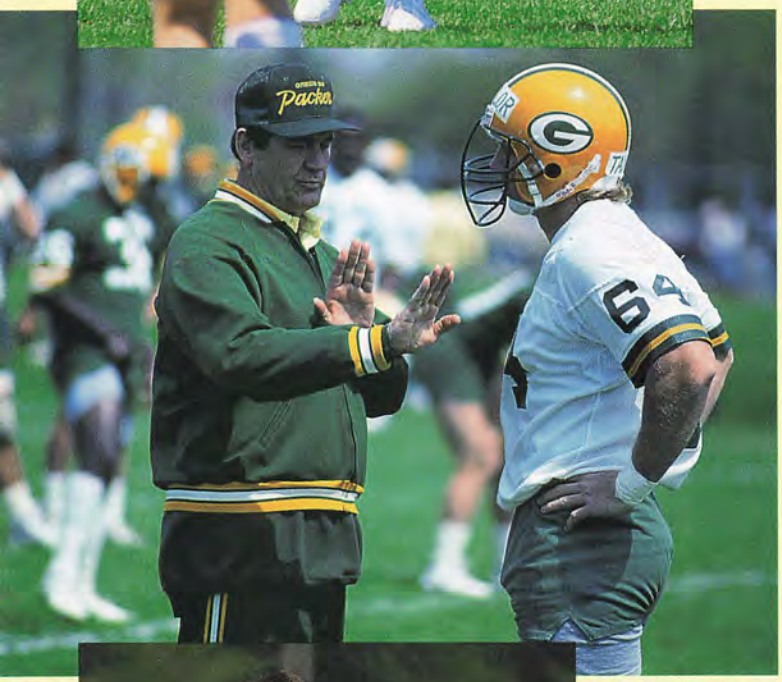


Charlie Davis

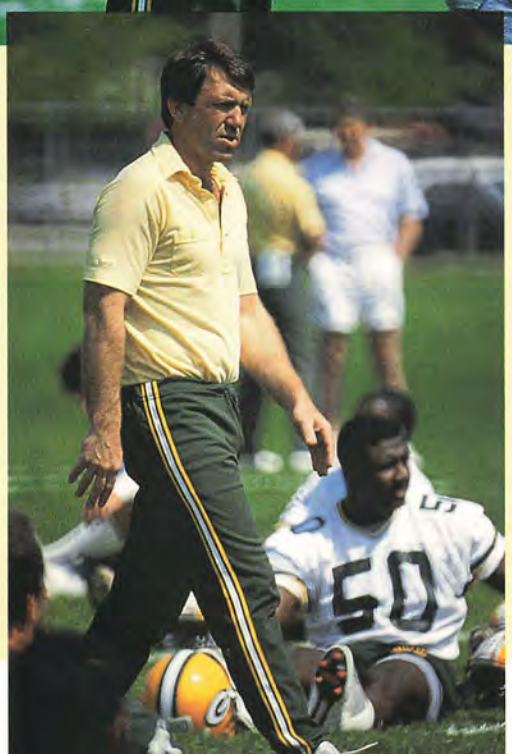


Willie Peete

Dick Jauron



Dick Moseley



Virgil Knight

Infante's assistants can be grouped into three background categories: the holdovers from Forrest Gregg's staff, those who worked with Infante at Jacksonville in the United States Football League, and those who have NFL experience outside of Green Bay.

During the transitional period between Gregg's resignation and the naming of a new staff under Infante, Gregg met with Infante, who had served as Gregg's offensive coordinator with the Cincinnati Bengals from 1980-83.

Infante asked Gregg if there were any negatives regarding the assistants who wished to remain in Green Bay. Gregg said no; he would give a recommendation to any one of them.

But many of Gregg's former assistants took other NFL jobs. Dick Modzelewski, who wanted to remain as defensive coordinator, turned down an offer to stay as defensive line coach and moved to Detroit, where he accepted a job as a defensive line coach. Quarterbacks coach George Sefcik was named offensive coordinator at Kansas City. Offensive line coach Jerry Wampfler took a similar position in San Diego; receivers coach Tom Coughlin was named receivers coach of the New York Giants, and linebackers coach Dale Lindsey and administrative assistant Forrest Gregg, Jr. joined Gregg at Southern Methodist University.

Knight, Peete and Jauron had a few anxious moments before officially being retained by Infante. There were no assurances they would stay when Infante was named head coach.

Knight, who had coached at Auburn University, admits to having had trouble adjusting to Green Bay's cold-weather climate when he moved here in 1984. But he said the town "grew on him". Knight and Peete each had an offer from another NFL team, but both opted to remain in Green Bay.

"It's a blue-collar atmosphere," Knight said of Green Bay. "It's a good atmosphere to raise a family. We'd have hated to leave.

"And you know the guy (Infante) is not only a good football coach, but also a good man. I think he's going to make some things happen. To me, he's taken this town over with his personality."

Jauron, a Packers assistant since 1986, played for Cincinnati in 1980, when Infante and Bullough were assistants there. He also coached with Bullough at Buffalo in 1985.

Peete also had connections with the new staff. He and Geis coached together at the University of Arizona in the mid-'70s. Peete's duties as special teams coach were assumed by Tippett, freeing Peete to concentrate on working with the running backs.

Geis, Blache and Davis had the advantage of being familiar with Infante's operational procedures, having worked at Jacksonville in 1984 and 1985. Geis spent the last two seasons at Memphis State, working as offensive coordinator. Blache worked at Southern University in 1986 and Kansas University in 1987. Davis was the tight ends coach of the Cleveland Browns for the last two years.

"Sure, it was a tough decision (to leave

Cleveland)," said Davis shortly after being hired. "I think the world of (Cleveland Coach) Marty Schottenheimer, and that team will continue to be right there.

"I have great, great respect for the guy (Infante). I'm convinced he'll be successful. I think our friendship is overplayed a bit. We are good friends, but our working relationship is totally different. It's not like we hang around together. We've just been very compatible."

Geis said the former Jacksonville coaches conversed on the phone perhaps three or four times a year after the USFL folded. Geis called Infante shortly after the Browns lost to Denver in the AFC championship game.

"I said, 'Lindy, I feel bad for you, but not too bad, because I know Green Bay is going to talk to you,'" Geis said. "Lindy keeps things inside himself. He just said, 'Yeah, I've been contacted by them, but I haven't called them back yet. I'll let you know if something comes up.'" Later, Infante hired Geis without a face-to-face interview.

Bullough was Gregg's defensive coordinator at Cincinnati and his first defensive coordinator in Green Bay, but left the Packers without ever coaching a game to become head coach of the Pittsburgh Maulers of the USFL. Bullough also coached the Buffalo Bills in 1986. Last year, he worked as a volunteer assistant at his alma mater, Michigan State University.

Tippett and Moseley came to Green Bay through the interview process. Moseley was defensive backs coach at Buffalo in 1985. Tippett worked as an assistant to John McKay at Tampa Bay for six years.

Infante's staff is relatively young—an average of 45.1 years of age. "This is not a business where age is a prerequisite," Infante said.

He plans on using his assistant coaches to supplement the scouting staff in preparing for the draft, just as Gregg did. Tippett said Infante relies much more on his staff in making personnel decisions than did McKay.

"I'm going to treat my assistants like I would want to be treated if I were an assistant," Infante said. "I'll give them the same respect that I'd expect if I were in their position.

"I don't think I'll ever be a guy who's hard to work for, because I'll always appreciate what they're going through."

Because Infante is so knowledgeable about offense, he often personally instructs players, much more than Gregg did. At the present, Infante plans on acting as his own quarterbacks coach.

"We're all intelligent enough to know that this is his offense," Knight said. "We knew right off the bat not to get your feelings hurt when he instructs players." The 1988 season should demonstrate what kind of job Infante did in assembling his staff.

"I'm excited about it (the season)," Tippett said. "I think in all areas of our coaching staff, we have some innovative people. I just hope I'm as innovative with the special teams as we are on offense and defense."

'Uke'

Shooting For Whole Season

By Sharon Raboin
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Keith Uecker knows all about frustration.

After Achilles tendon surgery, reconstructive knee surgery, two ankle surgeries and three or four arthroscopic knee surgeries–he can't even remember the exact number–who would not?

It has been injury after injury after injury. The Green Bay Packers acquired Uecker, a massive offensive lineman, in October of 1984. The Denver Broncos had waived Uecker off injured reserve, in hopes of activating him. But the Packers claimed him, enraging Broncos Coach Dan Reeves.

No, the average professional football player has not suffered as many injuries as Uecker has.

But Uecker refuses to throw in the towel. You see, he has wanted to compete in the National Football League for as long as he can remember. So it will take more than that to shake his resolve and dampen his enthusiasm.

"It's as much a dream as a job," said Uecker, a ninth-round selection of the Broncos in the 1982 draft. "It's hard to let a dream go. You only get so many chances in the pros. You have to take advantage of it and realize that everyone gets hurt.

"Most injuries I think you can come back from."

An imposing Keith Uecker is about to lower the boom on an unidentified Philadelphia Eagle.

"Uke", as he is known to his teammates, is hoping that this season will be different. He said he feels "the best I've felt in a long time." He has been lifting weights five times a week in the off-season and running with Packer strong safety Mark Murphy, combining long distance runs with sprints and hill work.

"I think it's definitely in the cards," Uecker said. "I'm due. I really feel good. I don't have any problems, which is kind of different for me. I'd like to play the whole season. That would really mean a lot to me. Stay healthy for the whole year."

The Achilles tendon injury was hindering Uecker when the Packers acquired him. That first season Uecker started two games at left guard when tackle Karl Swanke suffered an injury and left guard Tim Huffman was moved to left tackle.

The next season, in the last exhibition game, Uecker injured the anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee. He continued to play and suffered a severe tear to the knee in an October game against the Chicago Bears. He underwent reconstructive surgery in November and was sidelined the rest of the season.

"The major knee–that was the worst," Uecker said. "Somebody just stepped on the back of my right ankle. It didn't hurt too bad. I played half the year, but I was struggling. In the Chicago game, I tore some cartilage and started locking up."

"It's as much a dream as a job... you only get so many chances in the pros."

Uecker was unable to suit up the entire 1986 season. The Packers had considered activating him several times. But his knee was not thought to be strong enough. Uecker underwent additional surgery to correct the chronic Achilles tendon problem, which he first injured in 1982. Also he underwent arthroscopic surgery to mend tendinitis in his knee and a kneecap problem.

Last season Uecker started at right tackle, but later suffered a knee injury in an October game against the Detroit Lions. He was placed on injured reserve and missed five games. Uecker can't seem to escape the injuries. That season former offensive line coach Jerry Wampfler had called him the Packers' best offensive lineman at coming off the ball quickly.

"The obvious frustration is not being able to play in the games when you've been hurt," Uecker said. "A lot of times I've had trouble in the off-season, when I really want to prepare well. I'll start to get in really good shape and then I'll have a problem."

But his sense of humor is still intact.

"I think we're fortunate (pro football players)," Uecker said. "We get to see what it's like to be old before we are old."

Because of all the injuries that he has suffered, and the Packers' patience with him, Uecker said he feels he owes the team something. That is one reason he crossed the picket line when the NFL Players Association decided to strike. He was the only Packer player, not including those that were on injured reserve, to cross the line. He risked losing the friendship and support of his teammates, who honored the strike.

"Definitely I felt like I owed the organization something," Uecker said. "A lot of guys get hurt and they've been let go. They kept me around."

Also, Uecker said he isn't a big union man.

"I knew the strike was going nowhere," Uecker said. "It was a total waste of time. Time has proven that to be true. If I had to do it over again, I would have done it earlier."

Packers offensive line coach Charlie Davis said he is not concerned about all the injuries that Uecker has had. Injuries often run in cycles, he said.

"A guy might get hurt two or three years in a row and all of a sudden he gets this rap of being injury prone," Davis said. "Then he might go 10 years without anything."

A six-year veteran, Uecker said his injuries appear to have been related.

"I think I probably pushed everything too quick," Uecker said. "If you don't get one thing well, I think it causes other problems. I think you start overcompensating with the rest of your body."

Packers head trainer Domenic Gentile agreed. He said Uecker is a difficult player to keep off the football field.

"He's a guy who really enjoys playing football," said Gentile. "He really enjoys the camaraderie, the physical contact."

As a result of the injuries, Uecker probably has lost some speed, quickness and mobility. He said he tries not to think of what his career might have been like without the injuries.

"I'm sure he has lost some–nothing that's real noticeable," Gentile said. "You can't have that many surgeries and not have lost something."

Uecker, who stands 6-foot-5 and weighs about 285 pounds, is projected to start at right tackle, ahead of Alan Veingrad and Steve Collier. Offensive line is one of the Packers' strengths.

Davis said Uecker, an aggressive, tenacious type of player, could be switched to another position in the line.

"I won't promise that he might not be a left guard or a right guard or a left tackle or a center or wherever," Davis said. "We're going to put the guys out there who will give us the best offensive-line group."

Ken Ruettgers is projected to start at left tackle, Rich Moran at left guard, Mark Cannon at center and Ron Hallstrom at right guard.

Uecker's forte is run blocking. He has excelled because of excellent leg strength, despite all of his injuries, and experience. As a four-year starter at Auburn, Uecker learned the intricacies of run blocking.

"I'm real impressed with him as a player and I'm real impressed with him as a person," Davis said. "He has tremendous strength. I don't see a whole lot of weaknesses. He probably needs to be a bit more controlled in his pass protection, which I think he'll get as he gets involved in the system. I think he has the skills to do that and I'm very convinced he has the intelligence to do that."

Uecker also believes the new system should improve his pass-blocking skills.

"I had a lot of trouble getting some depth on my drops, on my sets," Uecker said. "And the way he's having us do it, I think I might be able to get back a little quicker."

Dave Brown assesses runback potential seconds after making interception at Kansas City.

Dave Is Dedicated

By George Sauerberg
Milwaukee Sentinel

Dedication.

It is personified by Dave Brown, the Green Bay Packers' right cornerback.

At 35, he is the oldest defensive back currently in the NFL. His 53 interceptions make him the league leader among active players.

You can attribute that largely to talent. You can attribute it even more so to dedication.

"That comes from my parents," he says.

His father, Asa, worked for 40 years at the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. plant in Akron, Ohio, before retiring about five years ago.

And Dave was deeply inspired by his mother, Lillian, who died after a long illness when he was 15.

"When my mother died, it was definitely a traumatic experience," Brown says. "It gave me a dedication and determination. I was going to do my best to make my mother pleased with me because I knew she'd be watching from heaven.

"I did a lot of growing up, a lot of appreciating. I learned a lot about life–about what's really important in life.

"It made me make a lot of decisions about what kind of man I was going to be."

Dave, the sixth youngest of seven children, has three brothers and three sisters. He says their mother's death made his younger brother, Timmy, and their father grow especially close "although we were a very close family."

His father remarried two years later, and Dave says they have a close-knit family with their stepmother, Wanda.

"I was always taught that whatever I did I would do the best I could possibly do," Brown explains. "Always be the best you can be.

"If you do something from your heart, if it's something you want to do, you'll do better at it than if you do it because someone wants you to do it.

"I enjoy playing this game. I'm going to play it with all my heart.

"I want to be the best to ever play my position."

Brown was a fixture at right corner for the last 10 of his 11 seasons with the Seattle Seahawks. He led the team in interceptions four times. He was named to the AFC Pro Bowl squad in 1984, when he made a career-high eight interceptions.

He was voted defensive captain by his teammates in his last four seasons at Seattle.

But the Seahawks went with younger cornerbacks last year, and the Packers were in dire need of a corner. So, in late August, the Packers acquired Brown for an 11th-round draft choice.

Brown was an instant answer to the vexing problem the Packers were having at right corner.

And he became a team leader.

Packer coaches and management wanted to exercise his leadership ability, Brown says.

"I felt that was part of my responsibility," he says. "I want to help this team win a world championship any way I can. If I feel I have something to offer, I'll give it."

The Seahawks went to the playoffs in 1983 and '84. They went 10-6 in '86. Brown joined a Green Bay team that was coming off a 4-12 season.

Brown says one of the biggest differences he noticed between the Seahawks and the Packers was "just the attitude of the team."

"I was coming from a team that was picked to win the Super Bowl, and there was nothing that was going to stop us," he says. "I was coming to a team that was building."

Brown says he spoke to the Packer team a few times during the season about "my experiences in life in general and playing pro football–about what we had and what I thought it took to win consistently.

"I talked about various perspectives on how to prepare yourself to win–winning attitude," he says.

"I think he's an example for our younger people," says Packer defensive backfield coach Dick Jauron. "They see what kind of commitment it takes not just to play and survive but to excel in the NFL when they see Dave.

"He's always looking for something to learn and always looking for an edge–something that can help him excel and something that can help the team win."

There's an axiom that goes: "Practice makes perfect."

But Brown prefers the one Seahawk Coach Chuck Knox uses:

"Perfect practice makes perfect."

"In practice, you're learning and refining techniques," Brown says. "Maybe you can do them better. In order to be a champion, you have to pay the price."

Sometimes, that means voluntarily spending time on the field after practice.

"To me, I have not arrived," he says. "I can always get better."

The Packers had to get better in a hurry at right cornerback last year. Tim Lewis' outstanding career had ended in 1986 after a neck injury. Mossy Cade, who had replaced Lewis, had been sentenced to prison.

"At the end of training camp, we decided we didn't have a starter," says Tom Braatz, Packer executive vice president of football operations. "We had to go out and trade for one. We ended up striking a deal with Seattle that resolved the problem that we had."

"I was very surprised to be traded," Brown says. "I've been brought up to have a thankful attitude for whatever I had. Having a job, I was thankful to God. I'm very happy to be with the Green Bay Packers."

Dave Brown on Dave Brown: "I want to be the best to ever play my position."

Brown started all 12 union games for the Packers. He shared the team lead in interceptions with three, and he had a team high of 13 passes broken up.

Ironically, Brown made his first NFL interception against the Packers in 1976 and his first of 1987 against the Seahawks.

The former University of Michigan star began his pro career with the Pittsburgh Steelers in 1975. The then-Super Bowl champions made him their first-round draft choice. He played in the Steelers' 21-17 victory over the Dallas Cowboys in Super Bowl X.

The Seahawks picked him in the expansion draft of 1976. He played free safety in his first season at Seattle, then moved to right corner. He's the only member of the original Seahawks still playing in the NFL.

A major reason is his off-season routine.

"I like to stay in good condition," he says. "I do a variety of exercises so I continue to develop different muscle groups."

He was the runner-up in the Washington State Men's Singles Racquetball Tournament in '87. His off-season activities include playing basketball, lifting weights and doing track workouts.

He also works on catching the ball. He dropped several passes last season, and he vividly remembers one in the third quarter of the 26-24 loss to the Chicago Bears at Lambeau Field.

"It should have been a catch," Brown says. "If it touches my hands, I'm going to catch it."

While Brown is pro football's leading active interceptor, former Washington Redskin and Minnesota Viking Paul Krause is the all-time leader with 81 interceptions.

"I've got a little ways to go," Brown says, chuckling.

"It's nice to be the leading active interceptor," he adds. "But what I want to do is win the world championship. Individual goals are nice, but this is a team."

Brown has two years remaining on the contract he signed in 1986. As for coming back to play this season, he says, "I've always been a man of my word. I feel I don't have an option to retire. I will be prepared to play.

"I'm really looking forward to this year. I'm looking forward to winning."

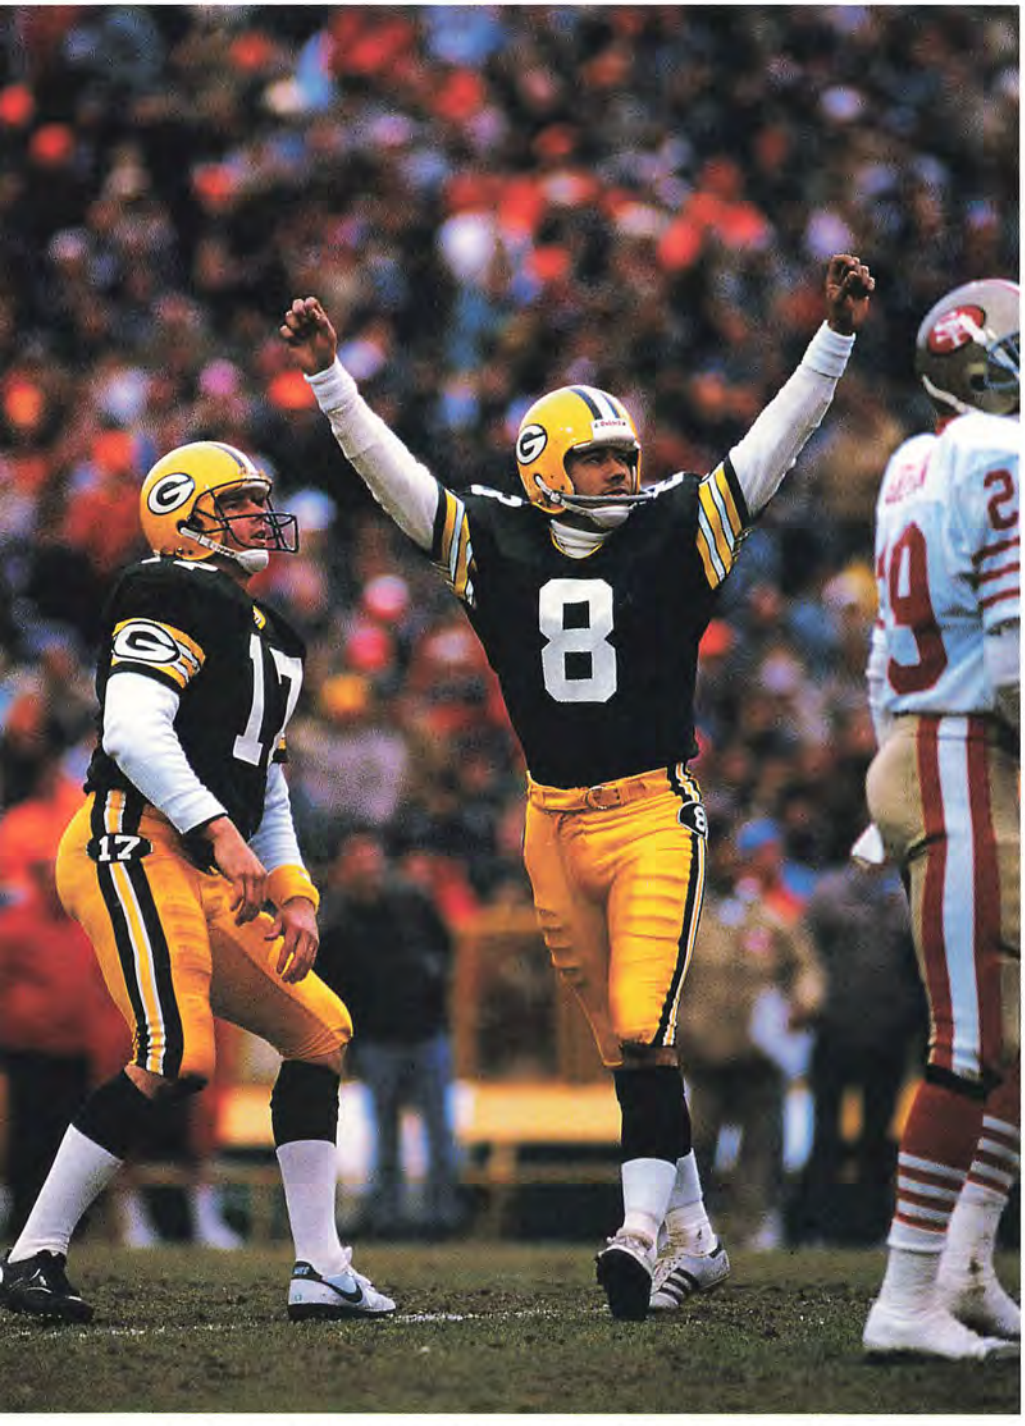
"I don't see any signs of him failing from last year's play," Braatz says. "When a person reaches 14 years in the National Football League, I imagine it's a year-to-year thing.

"There'll come a time when it will click off for him, and when it clicks off, he'll retire. But the Packers certainly do not have any problem with the way he played last year.

"As far as we're concerned, he is the incumbent right corner, and that's his job."

Brown has worked in the commercial real estate business in the Seattle area for the past six off-seasons, and he plans to go into that field full-time after he retires from football. So he'll be able to continue to provide for his wife, Rhonda, and their sons–Aaron, 8, and Sterling, 6.

But for the foreseeable future, Brown is dedicated to defending real estate, not selling it.



A jubilant Max Zendejas celebrates one of his 16 field goal successes.

Making·It·With·Max

By Lee Vogels
Green Bay News-Chronicle

It was strike ball, but it was football, and Maximiano Javier Zendejas had a job to do.

Along with some 50 other strike replacement players, the young Hispanic American with the well-known name was just trying to provide some entertainment for the wary fans in Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome in Minneapolis. The 13,911 fans showed up not knowing what to expect from the stop-gap brand of professional football. What they saw was Max Zendejas operating with professional skill.

When that first replacement game was over, Zendejas had sent three well-struck field goals squarely through the uprights for nearly one-third of the Green Bay Packers' 23 winning points.

With flawless accuracy, Zendejas continued to pound the ball home in the next two replacement games. When the three-game strike season was over, Zendejas had connected on 7 of 7 field goals and was one of 10 replacement players to be retained on the Packers' regular roster. Three weeks later, he had replaced incumbent kicker, Al Del Greco.

It was not the first challenge Maximiano had been called upon to overcome.

Those first years after the family's move from Mexico were difficult.

A teenager who spoke little English, Max found himself in a strange culture. His native shyness didn't make the transition any smoother.

"We had some rough times coming up from Mexico and not knowing the language," Max recalls of those early days in Chino, Calif. "We had to adjust to that, and it took a lot of laughing."

The family, four brothers, two sisters and many cousins, was his sanctuary then, as now. And athletic competition, wrought by his father, Joaquin Sr., a former professional soccer player in Mexico, provided a diversion from the trials of the real world.

The family played soccer but soon discovered there was a brighter future in kicking a football. Family kicking competition sprang up. The target was a piece of tape in the center of the goalpost, the stakes were Cokes and maybe a lunch.

The strong, accurate right leg forged in family competition began to pay dividends for Max's Don Antonio Lugo High School team.

As a senior, his first season of prep ball, Max made four field goals of over 50 yards.

College was the next plateau and Max found himself faced with another transition. Leaving the family was "one of the hardest things I ever did," he remembers.

There were the brothers, Luis, Joaquin Jr., Alan, the youngest, sisters, Gladis and Andrea, his father and mother. But Luis had broken seven college scoring records kicking for Arizona State University and was bound for the NFL. Joaquin Jr. had kicked for La Verne University (CA) and for the New England Patriots, and cousin Tony was kicking for the Los Angeles Express in the United States Football League.

"He was a shy, introverted individual," says Butch Henry, sports information director at the University of Arizona, recalling Max's arrival there in 1982. He seemed quite unsure of his surroundings, away from his family in Chino for the first time, Henry recalls.

As he had learned to do in the past, Max chased insecurity with a singular determination to succeed on the football field.

The reserved young placekicker gained almost instant recognition when, as a freshman, he beat Notre Dame at South Bend, IN, with a 40-yard field goal with six seconds left.

Willie Peete, Packers running backs coach, was an assistant coach with Arizona at the time and recalls the kick. "You take a young freshman who's from a small high school out in California and put him in a situation like that. I mean there's no bigger game than that, especially in college football at the time. It meant the game. Either we were going to win or the game was going to end in a tie.

"But he comes from a family that had that style," says Peete. "When you talk about kicking, the Zendejas name always comes up."

That was the beginning of the Zendejas legend at Arizona. What followed were three spectacular games which cast Max as a folk hero in the Hispanic community around Phoenix.

As a sophomore before a national television audience, Max brought the Wildcats from a one-point deficit to a 17-15 win over ASU with a 45-yard field goal as time expired.

The following season, the score tied 10-10 in the fourth quarter, Max kicked two field goals. Arizona won 16-10. Max's brother, Luis, missed a tying attempt.

THE kick came the following season, Max's senior season. Once again against Arizona State, which needed to win or tie to go to the Rose Bowl. Max kicked three field goals two of which came in the last five minutes of the game. Max pounded one from 57 yards out to tie the game. Then, with less than a minute left, he connected from 32 yards to give the Wildcats a 16-13 win.

"He had an extremely strong leg," recalls Larry Smith, former assistant coach at Arizona, now an assistant at the University of Southern California. "He just really had a lot of power. The other thing is he was an excellent clutch kicker. He gave us four great years of kicking."

While Max was becoming the third most prolific field goal kicker and fourth highest scorer in NCAA history, he was also contributing off the field.

A deep believer in human qualities, Max would give generously of his time to speak and counsel at neighborhood centers.

"He was very approachable and would do anything anybody wanted," recalls Butch Henry.

Once Max missed an interview session with a group of reporters because he had inadvertently scheduled it at the same time as a class. When he arrived late for the interview and learned the reporters had all returned to their hotel rooms, he sought them out one by one. "Max, being Max, went to the hotel rooms of each of the writers and gave individual interviews with each one of them," Henry recalls.

Max ranked second behind UCLA's John Lee going into the 1986 NFL draft. He was selected by the Dallas Cowboys in the fourth round, extraordinarily high for a kicker.

From the start, the situation at Dallas didn't agree with Max. He was a high draft choice on a team that had an established kicker in Raphael Septien. "I just could not believe they drafted me," Max recalls. Rumors about him were being circulated, he remembers. He felt the political substructure of the team was working against him.

"I went in there and I wanted to take that job away, and somebody was stopping me," Max recalls.

During the '86 preseason Max led the Cowboys in scoring, converting 2 of 6 field goals and 7 of 7 extra points. He didn't make the final roster.

The following October, Max was signed by the Washington Redskins, replacing Mark Moseley. Max hit six straight extra points and 2 of 3 field goals but fell into a slump and missed three consecutive extra-point attempts against Minnesota.

He recovered from the slump but injured a groin later in the season and was placed on injured reserve.

He was 5 of 5 on extra points in the '87 preseason, but the Redskins kept Jeff Atkinson, whom they later also released.

"They didn't even bother to look at me," says Max.

As they are apt to occur in major league pitchers, slumps sometimes befall NFL kickers. But Max has the innate ability to overcome slumps.

"The more confidence you show in him and express in him, the better he'll kick," says Larry Smith. "If he misses a couple, or goes into a slump, just hang in there with him and he bounces right back."

Bounce back is precisely what Max did.

The situation at Green Bay when Max signed on as a strike-replacement kicker last September was no bed of roses. Yet he produced better than at any time in his professional career.

A different problem confronted him when the strike was over. He had to compete for a job against the popular Al Del Greco in an atmosphere of post-strike turmoil.

Those were lonely times for a young legend from Arizona. He could often be seen off by himself in a corner of the Packers' indoor practice building, divorced from the camaraderie of Del Greco and his close friend and holder, Don Bracken.

"The biggest problem here was getting to be accepted by the team," recalls Peete, who coached the kickers last season.

By the Nov. 15 game at Seattle, Max had become the first kicker and Del Greco had been waived. Max was good on 10 of 13 field goals over the last seven games of the season. His season-ending percentage of 84.21 is the second highest efficiency mark in team history.

"As the season went along and he started kicking field goals and making them . . . you know, players are like everyone else, when they feel like a person's going to help them, then they start accepting him," says Peete.

He's the No. 1 now. Competitors will be chasing him. It's an occupational hazard for NFL kickers. There's always someone in the background jockeying for the job.

But they'll all be greeted with the usual Zendejas response to pressure.

He'll just keep his head down, "just keep going straight and things will work out."

How The Packers Were Built

The changing of the guard, with respect to Packer personnel, continued at a brisk pace in 1987. No fewer than 15 new faces surfaced on the final roster, the number including six draft selections and nine free agents.

This influx followed a bumper harvest in 1986, when 17 players were added, 13 of them via the free agent route. Eleven of the 17 remained on the 1988 roster at press time.

This is how the Packers were built through 1987 (before, of course, 1988's draft choices and free agents launched their bids for employment).

The Draft

It Was Sharp(e)

It is virtually impossible, we are told, to have your cake and eat it, too.

Yet there is a possibility–a distinct possibility–that Lindy Infante, the Packers' perceptive new leader, emerged from the 1988 National Football League draft with just such a rare "repast" in prospect.

Translation: It is one thing to improve your team in one area with a premium pick from what is formally known as the NFL's annual selection meeting; it is quite another to help yourself on both sides of the football with the addition of quality personnel, a feat the personable Floridian appears to have accomplished in plucking the likes of Sterling Sharpe, Shawn Patterson and Keith Woodside from this year's talent pool.

The jury, necessarily, is still out. But, based on early evidence from mini-camp performances and other sources, the Packers will be much better equipped to cope with their NFC Central competition in 1988 than they were a year ago.

The multi-talented Sharpe, a gifted wide receiver, could be a large part of the solution to a major Packer problem last season–getting the football into the end zone. (The Green and Gold ranked a lowly 26th in the 28-team NFL in scoring in 1987 with 255 points).

Sharpe, it would appear, is just what the proverbial doctor ordered. Described by Infante as "a potential all-the-way guy" once he gets his hands on the football, the University of South Carolina standout set a school career record with 25 touchdowns—not to mention marks for career receptions (163 catches) and yardage (2,444 yards).

The first wide receiver the Packers have drafted in the opening round since 1978, when they tapped James Lofton, Sharpe provides a marked contrast to his Stanford predecessor physically. Lofton, 6-3 and 200 pounds, was of the greyhound variety—the protypical wide receiver. Sharpe, on the other hand, is hardly the classic WR in structure. At 5-11 and 202 pounds, he is built more like a running back. Yet, with impressive 4.44 speed in the 40-yard dash, he is Lofton's equivalent as a deep threat. He also is exceptionally strong for his size, which should assist him in breaking tackles.

Sterling Sharpe, the Packers' No. 1 pick, is a sideline observer at mini-camp.

Rated the premier pure wide receiver in the draft, Sharpe has another asset that should stand him in good stead in Infante's "multiple approach" offense, which requires receivers to adjust their patterns on the run—he is a highly intelligent athlete. He earned not one but two degrees before graduating from South Carolina—one in interdisciplinary studies, the other in retailing.

Patterson, Green Bay's second-round selection, might well fill the Packers' most pressing need on the other side of the football—an outside pass rusher. Based on his mini-camp efforts, this Howie Long look-alike should make a strenuous bid for starting status.

Massive Ken Ruettgers, the Packers' starting left offensive tackle and "Most Valuable Offensive Player" of 1987, is one who has been quickly impressed by the brawny blond from Arizona State.

After being "challenged" by Patterson during pass-rushing drills in mini-camp, Ruettgers observed in candid tribute, "I think he's got it all."

Ruettgers admitted,"You can't tell anything in football until you put the pads on . . . but I'd say all-rookie team maybe."

Greg Blache, the Packers' new defensive line coach, also was favorably impressed with the newcomer. "He did some things that you hoped he would do," Blache acknowledged, adding, "he's a high-intensity guy."

During that three-day process, Patterson not only displayed eye-catching speed and quickness but, even more important, was relentless on every play.

The 6-foot-5, 261-pound former Sun Devil had been primarily a defensive tackle in college but, on the basis of his early efforts, it appears he will have to prove to the Packer coaches he can't play defensive end before he will be moved inside.

Woodside, plucked from the Texas A & M campus in the third round, is ideally suited to the multiple type offense being installed by Infante. Constructed along the lines of Sharpe at 5-11 and 203 pounds, he will be utilized as a so-called "H-Back", who can line up in the backfield and run inside and also be used in the slot or at wingback as a pass receiver.

His college statistics suggest he is a logical candidate for the dual-purpose role. He averaged nearly six yards per carry rushing over his career and also caught 109 passes—52 of them as a junior in 1986—to break the 23-year-old Southwest Conference record set by ex-Packer Donny Anderson at Texas Tech in 1965.

In selecting Woodside, Infante pointed out, "We need guys that can come out of the backfield and catch the ball and go out there and play in space, and we feel that in Keith we have a guy that fits those kinds of situations . . .This is the kind of guy we were looking for—he has excellent hands and has been a returner . . . He just does a lot of things—he's got the size to be a blocker if we need him to be, he's got the ability to take the ball and bounce it outside; he's got a wiggle about him."

The fourth round produced two other athletes who, though less publicized than the likes of Sharpe, Patterson and Woodside, also could be significant contributors to the cause—free safety Chuck Cecil of Arizona and defensive lineman

Shawn Patterson, the No. 2 selection, is a "high-intensity guy."

Rollin Putzier of Oregon.

Cecil, whose pick was acquired from the Raiders in completing the James Lofton trade of 1987, figures to be a major contender at free safety. A consensus All-American last season, he shared national collegiate honors for interceptions with nine. Also highly effective in run support, he led Arizona in tackles with a career-high 136 stops including 80 solos.

A highly intelligent athlete—he was an Academic All-American—Cecil also has other assets—deceptive 4.6 speed in the 40, excellent leaping ability and strong leadership qualities.

The San Diego native, who set a Pac-10 career interception record with 21 thefts, displayed his talents to advantage during the Packers' first mini-camp. One of those impressed with what he observed was Defensive Backfield Coach Dick Jauron, who said, "He has a sense for the ball, and he's a smart guy."

Infante, struck by Cecil's collegiate accomplishments, describes him as "one of those guys that plays from sideline to sideline—covers an awful lot of ground. He had nine interceptions last year, which shows he has a nose for the football. We really like his mental makeup as far as the game is concerned—he's a tenacious individual who will throw himself around."

Putzier's size (he's 6-4 and 280), and his knack for getting to the quarterback are what intrigued Infante and prompted him to make the huge Idaho native Green Bay's second selection in the fourth round. Putzier (pronounced POOT-seer) earned All-Pac 10 honors with the aid of six quarterback sacks and seven tackles behind the line of scrimmage.

Primarily a tackle throughout his college career, he is a candidate to provide an inside pass rush from nose tackle or in a four-man "nickel" situation.

The prospect of beefing up the pass rush also figured in the fifth- and sixth-round selections which procured linebacker Darrell Reed of Oklahoma and defensive end Nate Hill of Auburn, respectively.

"Darrell Reed is an outside linebacker that can close on the quarterback when he's a passrusher," Infante points out. "He has the ability to work around and through the running backs to get to the quarterback, and seems to possess the ability to be a good passrusher. I also think he's got the type of speed and athletic ability to be a good coverage man."

Hill, an intense performer with a "search and destroy" approach to the game, combined with All-American Tracy Rocker and Robert Goff to give the Tigers the premier interior defensive line in the South last season. He was involved in 88 tackles overall, punctuating his contributions with four sacks and seven tackles behind the line of scrimmage for 29 yards in losses.

Gary Richard, the seventh-round pick, is an undersized overachiever. Though just 5-9 and 173 pounds, he has played much bigger than that at the University of Pittsburgh, where his last season he was involved in 43 tackles, deflected a team-high 15 passes, had one interception and blocked two kicks.

Eighth-round selection Patrick Collins of Oklahoma, like Woodside a prime "H-Back" candidate, could well be the "sleeper" of the 1988 draft from Green Bay's standpoint. A track man as well as a football player, he is the possessor of exceptional speed (he has been clocked at 4.3 seconds in the 40-yard dash) and is a threat to score every time he touches the ball.

A compact 5-9 and 188 pounds, Collins didn't have an opportunity to carry the ball too often in Barry Switzer's shuttle system for running backs, yet averaged an impressive 6.5 yards per carry for 212 attempts over his college career. He also has excellent hands, according to Infante, who says of him, "He's the guy that can go out in space and do all the multi-talented things that you need halfbacks to do in the offense we are going to run."

Tight end Neal Wilkinson of James Madison University, harvested in the ninth round, is best known for his pass-receiving skills, documented when he tied the school record for touchdown receptions in a season (six) as a junior in 1986. That total matched the standard set by Gary Clark, who later played for Infante at Jacksonville in the USFL and now is a prominent member of the Washington Redskins' reigning Super Bowl Champions.

The Packers made history with their tenth-round selection by drafting a Green Bay native for the first time in 15 years and only the fourth time since the draft was originated in 1936. Like Jerry Tagge, the last home-grown product to be drafted by Green Bay, Bud Keyes is a quarterback and a graduate of Titletown's West High School.

Infante, who worked out Keyes several weeks prior to the draft before making the selection, feels the former Wisconsin Badger has a chance to make the pro grade. "He has got the size(6-2 1/2 and 211 pounds) and a good, strong arm," the Packer coach said. "We think he's a very sharp young man—we think he's got a lot of tools that project themselves toward the National Football League."

Tom Braatz, the Packers' executive vice president of football operations, also points out that Keyes is remindful of Don Majkowski, selected in the same round a year ago. "Both have strong arms, both are good athletes with ability, both are smart . . and Keyes was productive as a sophomore and junior, the same as Majkowski," Braatz observed.

No. 3 pick, Keith Woodside, is a prime "H-back" candidate.

Keyes, a classic, dropback type of passer rather than a running quarterback, did not find himself well suited to Don Morton's newly-installed veer offense at Wisconsin last season and left the squad after starting the first four games. He had his best collegiate season as a junior, when he led the Badgers in passing, completing 93 passes in 174 attempts for 1,002 yards and 5 touchdowns, and emerged as Wisconsin's total offense leader (1,113 yards on 214 plays).

The Packers were without an eleventh-round pick, it having been dealt to Seattle in completing a 1987 trade which brought cornerback Dave Brown to Green Bay.

The twelfth and final round produced another wide receiver candidate, Scott Bolton of Auburn, a 6-foot, 188-pound performer. "Scott maybe didn't have the statistics that some of the other receivers in the country had," Infante acknowledges, "but he's a guy that possesses good size and good speed (4.49 seconds in the 40). And he has the ability to read defenses and find the open areas . . . we feel good about his chances."

The Green Bay Packers 1988 Uniform: A New-Old Look

The Green Bay Packers will have a new-old look in 1988, "sartorially" speaking.

–New in the sense that one piece of their uniform will be different from a year ago.

–Old in the fact that the changes in battle dress will reflect the look of the Lombardi Era (1959-67).

The aforementioned changes removed the "G" logo with the players' number and the gold stripe from the side of the pants–leaving the green and white stripes and resulting in the look the pants presented in the memorable '60s.

There will be no changes in the components of the uniform –stockings, jersey or helmet.

PACKERS INSTALL COMPUTER EDITING

Head coach Lindy Infante gets demonstration of new computer editing equipment from Packer video director Al Treml (seated) and assistant, Bob Eckberg.

By Jim Hayes
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Al Treml received a gift of sorts when Lindy Infante was selected during the off-season to succeed Forrest Gregg as head coach of the Green Bay Packers.

Treml, the Packers' video director, became the chief operator of one of the National Football League's state-of-the-art video departments when the Packers installed a computer editing system for breaking down video in March. Treml said Infante was a major reason why the Packers decided to invest in the new system.

"It's one of the things he talked about before taking the job," said Treml. "He was familiar with it from being in Cleveland. His coming here was probably the deciding factor in us getting the new system."

Computer editing is one of the newest tools that NFL teams have the option of adding to their video departments. Treml said the Packers are one of about 12 teams that have made the jump to computer editing during the past two seasons. Cleveland, where Infante served as the Browns' offensive coordinator before joining the Packers, was one of the first teams to go to computer editing.

Bob Eckberg, Treml's assistant, said the Packers may not have had their editing system in place in time for the 1988 season if not for Infante.

"If there wasn't a coaching change we probably wouldn't have it," said Eckberg. "The old coaches weren't that interested in it."

The NFL began using video tape instead of film to record all of its games two years ago. Since then, more and more teams have gone to computer editing as they see the possibilities of complex editing.

Computer editing will allow the Packers to break down video with the help of a computer that is programmed to pick out certain plays from an opponent's game and group them together on a cassette. The Packers' coaching staff then will use the tape as they prepare a game plan.

For example, if the Packers are getting ready to play the Bears, Treml and Eckberg will receive video (sideline and end zone) from the Bears' three previous games. If the coaches want to see what the Bears do on a blitz, the computer can be programmed to pick out all of the plays in which the Bears blitzed and arrange them in any order, such as middle linebacker blitz, safety blitz, etc. If the coaches want to see what type of offensive plays the Bears have been calling inside their opponents' 20-yard line, the computer can find those plays.

By making changes in the program, the computer can pick out plays in which the Bears used a nickel back. If the coaches are looking for information on a certain player such as a running back, the computer also can pick out the plays in which that running back carried the ball.

Treml and Eckberg both took a computer class during the off-season to learn how to use their new equipment.

"I think we'll be working longer hours than we did last year," said Treml. "But we're going to give the coaches a lot more service. The final product will be no comparison."

Treml said the Packers decided against getting a computer editing system two years ago when they first switched from film to video tape. "Now we feel we're ready for it," he said. "Plus we feel we need it."

Treml and Eckberg spend their Monday nights during the season going through an opponent's video. The coaches need the video the following day to put together their game plan.

"Without the computer we couldn't do it and meet the time demands," said Treml.

Film video departments are important parts of every NFL team. With that in mind, the Packers and other teams have made major financial investments in computer editing. People such as Treml and Eckberg have proven to be valuable assets to coaching staffs around the league.

Treml said his job will become easier this season as he gets to know the new coaching staff.

"Bart Starr was a player when I first got here," said Treml. "By the time he became the head coach I knew what he liked to see on film and I could get it for him. If the communication is there the product is better."

Treml and Eckberg tape every practice session from the start of training camp until the end of the season. Their busiest time of the year is during training camp when coaches use practice tapes to help them evaluate and grade players.

"You need today's practice today," said Treml. "If you get it tomorrow it's like reading yesterday's newspaper."

Treml and Eckberg settle into a routine once the season starts. They shoot games on Sunday, work with an opponent's tape on Monday and tape practice the rest of the week. Most of their time during the season is spent working with tapes that have been sent in by other teams.

"We don't usually do things with our own tapes until the end of the year," Eckberg said.

Treml and Eckberg tape every exhibition and regular-season game. Each game is shot from two different angles. Treml shoots from the sideline, while Eckberg shoots from the end zone.

Treml, who has been a full-time employee of the Packers since 1967, represented the team at this year's NFL draft in New York for the second straight year. Eckberg has been a full-time staff member since 1982.

"We want to be the best video department in the NFL," said Treml. "I think that's the only way you should look at it." ©

GREEN BAY PACKER FOOTBALL

• They've • Got • The • Spirit •

By Tom Murphy
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Because of their vocations, Mitch Weber and John Blaha don't qualify as high priced gofers.

Highly placed? Perhaps.

Highly paid? No.

The disparities in no way dim their allegiance to the Green Bay Packers.

Weber and Blaha, college classmates in the 1970's, pack and unpack equipment trunks, pick up towels, socks and uniforms that missed the laundry hampers. They replace broken shoestrings, change cleats and check helmets and pads.

They find lost harnesses and straps and mouthpieces. They shag balls for placekickers and punters during pre-game warm-ups. They hear whatever passes for locker room humor on any given game day at Lambeau Field.

All gratis and all within hours and sometimes minutes after they've left Sunday services.

Weber and Blaha, you see, are Catholic priests.

The Rev. Mitchell Weber, 40, has been at Sts. Peter and Paul parish in Institute, north of Sturgeon Bay, since 1986. The Rev. John Blaha, 38, has been serving parishioners at St. Benedict parish, Suamico, northwest of Green Bay, for four years.

Blaha is from Two Rivers and Weber is a Green Bay native.

"I kind of grew up with the Packers," said Weber, whose uncle, Bob Noel, is the Packers' long-time equipment manager. "Whatever Bobby wanted, I've been doing since 1961, when he was assistant to the late 'Dad' Braisher."

Weber said he doesn't remember being in awe of a professional football player because he was so young when he started helping Noel in the visiting team's locker room and bench. The Weber-Blaha duo moved to home team headquarters when Noel succeeded Braisher.

"But I've got very fond memories of George Halas," Weber said of the Chicago Bears' owner, founder and coach whose 319 victories over 40 years are still tops in the National Football League.

"He gave me an autographed copy of the book he wrote and was always a gentleman in my mind."

Weber said he clearly remembers playing catch with the diminutive Buddy Young when he was in the

Cleaning the players' shoes is one of the padres' primary tasks.

Baltimore Colt front office after his playing days.

"But maybe my biggest thrill was holding the playbook for Tom Landry and Don Meredith during the Ice Bowl," Weber said. The 1967 Packer win, 21-17 on Bart Starr's sneak behind Ken Bowman and Jerry Kramer blocks, set the stage for Green Bay's second straight Super Bowl appearance.

After his ordination, Weber was ready to join the U.S. Navy as a chaplain and leave his share of the chores to Blaha.

Blaha started on the field in 1976 "a couple of weeks after I told Mitch I thought I recognized him down on the field during a game." Obviously Blaha's eyes were right and his observation put him on the bench with Weber.

"My dad was a Great Lakes ship captain and I guess the sea, if you will, was in my blood," Weber said.

He enlisted as a Navy chaplain in 1981 and among his assignments during five years of service was 15 months of "peacetime" duty in the now-steaming Persian Gulf. He also saw duty at the Quantico, VA, Marine base before receiving a medical discharge in 1985.

"Today I still have ship captain friends of my dad's and mine on the Lakes who invite me to take vacation trips on their boats." Periodically, Weber will get a call from a captain friend who has had to put into Bay Shipbuilding in Sturgeon Bay for repairs.

Blaha, by Weber's standards, is a "Packer nut" and has been since his Two Rivers grade school days.

"My favorite player is still Bobby Dillon," Blaha said. The all-pro defensive back from Texas intercepted 52 passes in 1952-59, a mark that still stands. There were just 12 league games a year when Dillon set the mark.

"And he did it with one eye, that's what amazes me," Blaha said. Dillon's number? "Forty-four," Blaha answered in an instant.

"A real trivia nut," Weber said of Blaha.

Weber said Ray Nitschke, the all-time Packer linebacker who now makes his home in the Green Bay area, is his favorite.

"There's a guy who made it from nothing," Weber said of the Illinois fullback-linebacker who overcame big odds as a teen and young adult to blossom as a solid citizen.

"Ray's the kind of guy you look at and you know he's going to make it big. Determination. Willpower. He's got it," Weber said. "To me, Ray was the epitome of the NFL. He had it tough. He worked hard and made it himself."

Blaha said, "The kids in our parish think it's real neat" that he works the sidelines and locker room during home games.

"But then there's the mother who, on purpose, I swear, dressed up her child in a Minnesota Viking outfit and they came up to communion together. (The girl) was too young for communion so I know they were doing it to 'tweak' me," he said.

There is always the church member, who, during current, oh-so-repetitive losing seasons asks Revs. Blaha and Weber if they're not praying for their team.

The stock answer, Blaha said, is: "We're not in operations. We're only in sales. The equipment staff hasn't lost a game yet."

Despite the fact that his last Sunday Mass in Institute is over about 11 a.m., Weber says he can make it to Lambeau Field, a 55 to 60 mile trip, in plenty of time to do more than take up space on the sidelines.

"The field already has been checked for footing and we tell the players what length cleat we think they need," Weber said. "If three-quarter inch cleats are right, they'll try half-inch. Surer than heck, they're back in for us to change them to three-quarters. Part of the job."

Sticking with their position that the pair is in sales, not operations, neither priest would stick his neck out and predict the number of wins for Lindy Infante's first Packer team.

"Everyone of those guys is talented, or they wouldn't be here," Weber said. "I like working some of the rookie camps, though, to see the guys with stars in their eyes.

"You can tell the achievers, just like Nitschke, just by looking at them."

Neither Blaha nor Weber consider themselves chaplains, they said.

"There are some of the older guys who know we're priests. But it's rare that a rookie knows," Weber said.

"They know we're here if they need us."

Their idea of the perfect football professional?

"We ask the coach to find a player who had hit a laundry hamper from five feet away and draft him. Then we'll clone him."

Trio Adds Dimension To Packer "Hall"

Lee Remmel
Editorial Director

One played a major role in saving the Packer franchise as 1950 dawned . . .

Another blazed a trail for blacks to play for Green Bay's green and gold . . .

And yet another helped the Packers win three consecutive National Football League championships during the memorable '60s.

All three–contributor Jerry Atkinson, receiver Bob Mann and defensive end Lionel Aldridge–were inducted into the Packer Hall of Fame during the HOF's annual enshrinement dinner at Green Bay's Regency Conference Center last February 13, adding depth and dimension to the Green Bay Shrine.

Atkinson's numerous and significant contributions to the Packer cause began in 1949 when–with the Packers in precarious financial straits–he played a key role in planning, promoting and staging a Packer intra-squad game at Green Bay's old City Stadium on Thanksgiving Day–an event which raised enough money ($50,000) to keep the team afloat for the balance of that season.

Recalling the anatomy of that initial involvement, Atkinson revealed that Packer founder/coach E.L. "Curly" Lambeau, President Emil Fischer and treasurer Frank Jonet had come to see him at his H.C. Prange Co. office in Green Bay.

"They said, 'We'll get right to the point. The team is $90,000 in debt, and we must raise $50,000 in 12 days'."

The Packers' financial problems had been spawned by a combination of bidding war for players between the National Football League and the rival All-American Football Conference, which had escalated salaries, and the two poorest seasons in the 30-year history of the franchise—3-9 in 1948 and 2-10 in 1949.

Atkinson agreed to accept a "draft" as chairman and subsequently set up a Dutch treat breakfast at a Green Bay hotel to launch a fund drive, a meeting from which the intra-squad game evolved.

Just a few months later, Atkinson again was called upon–this time to help direct a stock drive, designed to re-capitalize the Packers' depleted treasury. It produced more than $100,000–a modest sum in comparison to the multi-million dollar figures involved in today's NFL–but it stabilized the Packers financially at that point in time and enabled the team to continue in the NFL. Jerry was named to the Packer Board of Directors that year.

In 1956, Atkinson played a prominent role in yet another drive–the one which led to the construction of Lambeau Field, a major development in Packer history because it dramatically strengthened the club's competitive position in the league.

Two years later, the department store executive was named to the Packer Executive Committee, a capacity in which he continued until his resignation in 1985. In that role, he was involved in the hiring of the late Vince Lombardi, whose impact on Packer history has been well documented. He also served as a valued counselor to Chairman of the Board Dominic Olejniczak during his 24-year tenure as Packer president, and more recently to the team's current president, Judge Robert J. Parins.

Along the way, Atkinson served as chairman of the corporation's building committee which planned and presided over construction of the Packers' indoor practice facility (in 1982) as well as a $2.8 million remodeling and expansion of the administration building and training quarters, a project completed in 1983, which have made Packer facilities among the very finest in the NFL.

"We'll get right to the point. The team is $90,000 in debt and we must raise $50,000 in 12 days."

Looking back over those four decades of service against the backdrop of the Packers' current organization, Atkinson says with pride, "I think the Packer Corporation has made great strides."

Despite the importance of his contributions to these "strides," Jerry is not comfortable with being described as a savior of the franchise.

"Never have I considered myself as anything more than just a member of the team," he said.

Mann, who had been an All-American at the University of Michigan (1947) on what was regarded as one of the greatest college football teams of all-time was the first black ever to play in a league game for the Packers.

He was, however, much more than that.

Bob had cut a wide swath through the NFL with the Detroit Lions before joining the Packers, catching 66 passes in 1949 to lead the league and set what was then a Detroit single season record.

In coming to Green Bay late in the 1950 season–after being unable to agree on a contract with the Lions, Mann brought immediate respectability to a struggling Packer offense and a welcome target to the Packers' rookie quarterback of that season, Tobin Rote of Rice.

The following year, he became only the second receiver in Packer history to catch as many as 50 passes in a season, finishing fourth in the NFL overall.

To put this accomplishment in perspective, the only other receiver to turn that trick in the Packers' previous 30 seasons was the legendary Don Hutson.

In the two succeeding seasons, 1952 and '53, Mann teamed with Bill Howton to provide the Packers with one of the most feared receiving tandems in professional football. Unfortunately for him, and the organization, he suffered a knee injury during the 1954 pre-season which forced him to call it a career.

Although retired for 34 years, the talented ex-Wolverine still ranks among the top 25 receivers in the Packers' 69-year history with 109 career catches.

The personification of soft-spoken dignity, he doesn't consider himself a history-maker.

"I didn't feel like I was a pioneer," Mann said prior to his Hall of Fame induction. "Times change, necessities change. Green Bay. Black players were going to be more and more involved in football. I just tried to be me."

Summing up that experience, he said, "I didn't have any problems at all. Everyone treated me real well."

Aldridge, who now makes his home in Milwaukee, owns several distinctions that earned him a place in the "Hall."

Not the least of these is the fact he became a starter under the late Vince Lombardi in 1963 as a rookie–a rare achievement since Lombardi studiously avoided starting first-year players.

A year later, Lionel won all-pro honors at defensive end in his second NFL season.

Then, the next three seasons, he played a major role as he and his fellow Packers of the mid-'60s made pro football history.

He helped Green Bay win three consecutive NFL championships–in 1965-66-67. The Packers thus became the first and–to this day–only team in league history to win three straight titles since the NFL adopted the playoff system in 1933.

To embellish that heroic accomplishment, Lionel also helped the Packers forge another impressive chapter in the game's history following those 1966 and 1967 NFL title conquests with victories in the first two Super Bowls.

In all, Aldridge was a Packer starter for nine consecutive seasons (1963 through 1971) under three different head coaches –Lombardi, Phil Bengtson and Dan Devine.

The day he was enshrined, Lionel's thoughts turned to another, a former teammate.

"It's just a real happy time," he said, adding, "It's an opportunity to rejoin many of the people I played with in Green Bay. It's also a time for me to remember a guy, Henry Jordan, old Number 74 . . . he died of a heart attack.

"I played next to him for seven years here in Green Bay. We were very, very close on the field, and for some reason I'm remembering him today.

"I remember him for his kindness, his warmth . . . his guidance," Aldridge said softly. "He was the veteran, and I was the rookie when I came here . . . he was very giving."

And so, to be sure, were Number 82 and his fellow honorees, jointly enshrined in the Packer "Hall" on that occasion—for all seasons.

Legendary Don Hutson, who still owns seven receiving records 42 years after retirement, displays ceremonial coin he flipped prior to Super Bowl XXII.

HUTSON HAD A HAND IN SB XXII

The Packers had a hand in Super Bowl XXII . . .

One of the most celebrated in the history of professional football, in fact. It belongs to Don Hutson, the fabled receiver of the 1930s and '40s, who had the honor of flipping the ceremonial coin for the '88 classic at San Diego's Jack Murphy Stadium last January 31.

Hutson's selection for the assignment marked the second consecutive year that a former Packer great has been chosen to officiate at the pre-game coin toss. A year ago, Commissioner Pete Rozelle tapped Willie Davis, a six-time all-pro defensive end during the '60s to make the ceremonial flip.

Possessor of a dry wit, Hutson approached his role with characteristic grace and humor during a press conference appearance at the San Diego Marriott prior to the game.

"With people like (George) Halas and Art Rooney and (Bronko) Nagurski, who I know very well –people like that–I'm in pretty fast company," he observed, referring to previous selections for the assignment. "And I appreciate the fact that Mr. Rozelle (Commissioner Pete) gave me this opportunity."

The legendary pass-catcher, who has been retired for 42 years but still owns seven National Football League records, couldn't resist adding, "I'm also happy that Mr. Rozelle had the Super Bowl (on) my 75th birthday (Jan. 31). I didn't know he was that crazy about me. But anyway he did, and I'm happy that he did."

Asked his opinion of the Super Bowl, the personable Alabamian–still trim and erect–laconically put pro football's showcase contest in perspective.

"Well, I think it's a far cry from the first championship game that I played, for instance, and that's what it is," Hutson said. "The second year I was in Green Bay, Boston won the East and we won the West, so we were going to play for the championship.

"The week before the championship, George Marshall bought the Boston team and, of course, it was announced in the paper that they were going to move them (the Redskins) to Washington. They didn't know what the hell to do. Here we were supposed to play this championship game in Boston, and they thought the people would be so mad they wouldn't come to the game, so the commissioner (League President Joe Carr) decided to have it in New York, so we played it in the Polo Grounds. So we played Boston for the 'Super Bowl' championship in New York. There were about 35,000 people there–something like that, I suppose, which was a pretty good crowd, considering the way the 'Super Bowl' started for me."

Had he ever "fantasized," Hutson was asked, about playing in a game of Super Bowl XXII's magnitude.

"Well, of course, it never occurred to me at all," he rejoined. "Football was so different then. In the first place, of course, the crowds were not as big. One of the main things was that we played 60 minutes a game and nobody thought anything about it. It was kind of a normal thing, as we didn't have the free substitutions. Once the free substitutions started, the whole thing changed. It was one of the big things that changed, because now you have specialists in every position. You take a fellow that plays offensive guard now weighs 265 and he can run and he can block. But he's been playing offensive guard since he was in junior high school so he's damned good at it.

"...they paid me $300 a game. This was so unheard of ... They gave me a split check..."

"In our day, of course, when you had to play both ways, on offense and defense, you generally were not as good in one as the other. Some people were. One I think of is Mel Hein, who played with New York. He's in the Hall of Fame. And he was just as good on offense as he was on defense. Another was Nagurski. I think he made All-American at two different positions when he was in college. Another one is Clarke Hinkle, who played at Green Bay. They were just as good on offense as they were on defense. But these were by far the exceptions. And the ones that I have mentioned are already in the Hall of Fame, which proves my point, I think."

Hutson wryly confirmed that the rules are not the only things about pro football that have changed since he played the game. So, he was quick to note, have the salaries. He had graduated from the University of Alabama in 1935, the year before the National Football League draft was implemented, and thus was–along with all other graduating collegiate football players–a free agent.

"I went to Green Bay and they paid me $300 a game," he said, observing with a chuckle, "This was so unheard of in Green Bay. They had two banks there at the time and they gave me a split check–one from one bank and one from the other–so even the people in the bank wouldn't know how much I was making. It was somewhat unbelievable, you know– $300 a week."

When asked if he would like to catch passes from John Elway, Hutson replied with alacrity, "Wouldn't anyone? . . . You know, I've always had a feeling for passers and he's an absolute sight. You know, they say, 'Would you pay to go and see him play?' There's one guy I'd pay to go and see play because he makes the game so exciting."

Taking note of the players he considers the NFL's premier receivers today, Hutson said, "I like (Steve) Largent. I know this guy in San Francisco, (Jerry) Rice, had the most phenomenal few weeks during the season. I've seen all his games on television and he is something to see. And I don't minimize him when I take Largent. The only reason I do is because Largent has played 12 years and he's still doing what he's doing. And Rice is just getting started. When he's played 12 years, he may have a thousand touchdown passes, the way he's playing now. I think I'd take Largent just for the reason that I said. He's great. And you know, you really shouldn't stop there. I've never seen so many good receivers as they have in pro football right now. Look at that (Anthony) Carter. And there are a dozen more of them that are really outstanding."

Asked if any of those current NFL receivers remind him of himself, Hutson replied, "Well I'd say it would be Rice and Largent."

Then, exhibiting a sly smile, he summed up, "I don't know what they'd say about that, but that's what I think."

THE PACKERS ARE BIG BUSINESS

During the course of a season, nearly $12,000,000.00 of new outside income can be attributed to the Green Bay Packers.

By Harry Maier
Green Bay Press-Gazette

When the Green Bay Packers take to the field at Lambeau Stadium, they create more than the noise heard from the Packer stands.

There's also the noise of jingling cash registers at area merchants.

The Packers are big business. An economic impact study commissioned by the Green Bay Packer Corp. shows just that.

It was taken among fans who attended Green Bay home games in 1986 by JMA Applied Research Group Inc.

The study was conducted in an attempt to demonstrate that the Green Bay Packer Corp. offers more than just entertainment to the people of Green Bay and Brown County; it is also an important contributor to the area's economy.

Essentially, the study showed that the total direct and indirect spending generated is estimated at approximately $35 million per year.

A major contributor to that total is the Packer corporation itself. Each year, the corporation spends about $30 million to meet its own expenses. Of that total, about one-third is spent within Brown County.

When this amount is combined with the money spent by non-local fans in other local businesses, a total of nearly $12 million of new outside income can be attributed to the franchise.

Doug Schubert, president of the Green Bay chapter of the Wisconsin Innkeepers Association, said the fact that the Green Bay group wants all Packer games to be played in Green Bay speaks for the economic impact of the football team.

"The impact is substantial," he said, adding "it is our objective to bring all games to Green Bay."

He quoted a Green Bay television station which conducted a survey on moving the games to Green Bay, noting of 5,000 calls, 75 percent of the callers preferred all Green Bay games for the Packers.

"The Packers are a major industry in this area. The residual effects of the people the Packers bring in here is impressive," Schubert said.

Dan Bodden, general manager of Bay Park Square in nearby Ashwaubenon, said a study of shopping mall customers shows traffic is up 12-17 percent on home game weekends.

"It starts Friday night and goes right on to game time," Bodden said of the out-of-town shoppers. "The big item for purchases is clothing," he said.

Friday night "is real good, but

In addition to shopping, fans spend money on lodging, restaurants, liquor, groceries, parking and miscellaneous items.

Saturday is phenomenal," Bodden stated.

The Packer corporation believes it is the first in the National Football League to publicly release information on the economic impact of its franchise on the home community.

The JMA study pointed out that a study of this type must identify both the direct and indirect spending that is generated. When money is spent and respent on other goods and services, the total impact is typically measured by applying a regional multiplier of 3.124.

The formula estimates the indirect spending based upon a community's demonstrated ability to retain income locally before it ultimately finds its way to other locations to pay for the wide variety of products that consumers necessarily purchase from producers in other communities.

Examples of the major sources of new income are the monies the Packer corporation receives from its television contract and the spending among fans who do not reside within the immediate Green Bay area.

Primary revenue sources are national television and radio, $14.8 million; gate receipts, $6.7 million and game receipts from other cities, $2.7 million.

The study showed that of the Packers direct outlay of approximately $30 million, $10.4 million was spent in Brown County. That included $2 million in overhead expenses, $1.9 million for players salaries (of a total of $13.6 million), and $4.7 million for capital outlays.

It's apparent the Packer fans also enjoy the concessions while attending games, spending $1.2 million, of which the Packers receive $480,000. Local charities which operate the concession stands net approximately $120,000.

Like every other team in the NFL, player compensation is the major expenditure of the Green Bay Packers. The $13 million in salaries and bonuses represents about 56 percent of the organization's annual total operating expenses, which the Packers consider to be consistent with the relative levels of spending for the league.

The average salary for the athletes was about $250,000. But because a player must prorate his income over a spending level based on his expected lifetime income, JMA projects that level to be $100,000 to $150,000 a year.

Based on the number of players who live in Green Bay year-around (13) and that the remaining members of the team live in the area for five months, JMA projected that 37 percent of that income remains in the Green Bay community. The potential local spending level for the players has been determined to be $1.9 million a year within Brown County.

The study year also showed the Packer corporation to have spent $6 million in capital outlay at the stadium. That included construction of the enclosed suites along both the east and west sides of the playing field. In previous years, there have been times of equally high expenditures for the new scoreboard, practice field enclosure, expanded stadium and other improvements.

State and local governments also benefit from the Packer presence. The corporation paid $1,334,811 in income, sales and property taxes and another $156,000 to the City of Green Bay for the use of the city-owned stadium.

Related to the economic impact of the corporate spending, JMA also took a survey of Packer fans. More than 50 percent of all season-ticket holders surveyed returned the mailed questionnaire.

The survey found that 50 percent of the Green Bay season-ticket holders attend all games played in Green Bay, while 75 percent of their counterparts attend all the Milwaukee games. At three of the Green Bay home games, 200 person-to-person interviews were conducted.

Fan spending has a significant impact on the local community.

In-stadium spending includes 46 percent for beverages, 27 percent for food, 14 percent for souvenirs and programs and 13 percent for parking.

With many of those fans spending one or two nights at local hotels or motels, they report 29 percent of that spending for restaurants or fast food establishments, 18 percent for lodging, 16 percent for liquor, 15 percent for transportation, 7 percent for groceries and 15 percent for miscellaneous.

Total fan spending per game amounts to $665,000, about $215,000 in the stadium and $450,000 at local businesses.

Even those fans who do not attend the game are important. Spouses who do not attend the game, but travel to Green Bay, report that 50 percent of them will engage in shopping while in the city.

In addition to the direct and indirect economic impact of the Packer corporation on the community, it has made another direct impact through the Green Bay Packer Foundation.

The foundation was formed just a year ago and Paul J. Schierl, chairman and chief executive officer of Fort Howard Corp., was named chairman.

The foundation recently announced its first grants, totaling $42,700.00.

Among the recipients were the Green Bay Boys and Girls Club, Lac Baie Girl Scouts, Bellin College of Nursing, Brown County Library, Sullivan-Wallen Post of the American Legion and the Neville Public Museum.

The Historic B Team

Kevin Willhite burst through huge hole in Detroit line during second replacement game October 11, to the delight of Packer faithful in Lambeau Field.

By Art Daley
Editor Emeritus

The Packers' season of 1987 will forever carry a footnote–a sort of infamous footnote.

It was the year the Packers had two different teams for the first time in their long and colorful history. They had the Regular Team and the Replacement Team. These squads were given various names–like the Regulars were known as the A or Union Team and the Replacements were called the B Team, Scabs or the Strike team.

Whatever, each had separate records but counted as one total at the close of the season. The A Team posted 3 wins, 8 losses and 1 tie; the B Team 2-1; and the final total was 5-9-1.

One game was cancelled–the third contest, which called for the Packers to visit Tampa Bay. Thus, the Pack played a 15-game schedule.

The B Team played Games 4, 5 and 6, sending the Packers in order to Minnesota and then back to Lambeau Field to meet Detroit and Philadelphia.

It seemed downright crazy for a few days during Week 3 as some 60 replacements filtered into Green Bay and the Regulars worked out on their own, picketed in front of the stadium or, in some cases, went home for a brief vacation.

The start of the strike was quite a downer because the Packers had just played a very heart-warming tie with the Denver Broncos, raising hopes that the Pack had something going despite the opening day loss to the Los Angeles Raiders.

This was the second regular season strike in NFL history. The first was in 1982 when all teams came to a dead stop for 57 days, not to mention eight games. That strike was over money (percentage of the gross) and the 1987 strike was over free agency.

The Packers, like other teams, were prepared for the second strike because of noises from the National Football League Players Association. Tom Braatz, director of Packer football operations, and his personnel people moved into action earlier in the season. Some of the players brought in were in Packer training camp and did not make the final roster.

While the Regulars, headed by Union Rep-Center Mark Cannon, looked on, Coach Forrest Gregg and his staff set out to make a winner out of a collection of enthusiastic and willing castoffs. Gregg had about 10 days to whip a team into shape for a game against the Vikings and he could be excused if he skipped the "this is a football" route. The players were pretty much out of condition but Forrest worked them hard and the 2-1 finish indicated the players responded very well.

The biggest problem in forming a team was finding a good quarterback and kicker and, of course, some outstanding defensive players.

The QB of record turned out to be one Alan Risher, a 26-year-old stockbroker from Louisiana, who had experience in the USFL. He completed 60 per cent of his 74 passes and threw three for TDs. He was backed up by Willie Gillus of Norfolk State, who could wheel it 60 yards on the fly. Gillus saw brief action in the third game and thus became only the second black QB in Packer history, the first being Charley Brackins in 1955.

The kicker was Max Zendejas, who hit seven for seven in field goals. Max made such an impression that he later beat out Al Del Greco after the regular season resumed.

The defense allowed 45 points in three games–a Super Bowl average of 15 per. The offense scored 55 points and produced a 100-yard rusher, Kevin Willhite, who reached that mark vs. the Eagles. In the same game, Lee Morris rolled up 132 yards on six pass catches. He finished with 16 catches in the three games.

The B boys provided exceptionally good theater in their three weeks of fun and games. The victory in Minnesota was saved with a late 73-yard interception return by a real estate salesman and the two games in Green Bay went to overtime.

The Packers seemed to have the starter in the Metrodome well in hand, taking a 20-7 halftime lead. The Vikings closed it to 20-16 early in the third quarter when Lee Morris stumbled on the Vikes' lousy turf on a reverse with an easy TD ahead. Zendejas then kicked a field goal.

In the closing minutes the Vikings drove to the Pack eight-yard line but on first down Safety Jim Bob Morris, the real estate guy, intercepted a Tony Adams pass and raced 73 yards to the Viking 23.

Only 13,911 of the 63,000 seats were filled for the game but that meant little to the Packers, who (1) had produced a victory and (2) earned a football pay check.

Now it was on to Green Bay and there was a good turnout, a crowd of 35,779 (57,093 capacity) for a penalty-filled thriller that lasted four hours and nine minutes. The score was tied three times, 3-3, 13-13 and finally 16-16 on a 45-yard field goal by Zendejas with time running out in regulation. Detroit won it in 12:26 of overtime, 19-16.

Gregg and his players were most unhappy with the officiating and the audience set up a fierce howl. The big bugs were two calls for intentionally grounding by Risher while the Lion QB seemed to escape with his grounding. In the Lions' winning drive, a 15-yard pass interference call kept Detroit's move alive and Gregg said later he just couldn't understand the logic to the call.

At any rate, the B-teamers had one more shot and they knew it would be their last because the strike had ended two days before the Eagles' invasion.

This turned out to be an emotional production as a crowd of 35,842 looked on in amazement as the Packers put on a 76-yard, 10-play drive for the winning touchdown in overtime. Fullback Jim Hargove roared seven yards up the middle for the payoff, 16-10.

The audience was most appreciative and the fans stood and chanted "B Team, B Team" as the strangest team in Packer history left the field. Some of the players exchanged high-fives with the fans.

The happy replacements found those final minutes in the locker room bittersweet. It was the end of a fantastic three weeks of football for young men who, a month previous, never gave football much of a thought.

"This is an experience I will cherish for a lifetime," said wide receiver Patrick Scott.

"You almost feel like crying because it took awhile, but we came together," Willhite said. "It's like splitting up the family. A couple of people had tears in their eyes. Maybe we're not the 'A' Team but we proved ourselves."

Gregg praised the newcomers for their efforts during what could be called a most trying period. Gregg, in his post-game comments, said, "a year or two or five years from now, this will all be a pleasant memory. I'll always remember these guys. I'll never forget 'em."

Ironically, a few months later Gregg left professional football for a shot at college football—at his alma mater, SMU.

Forrest's successor, Lindy Infante, who was involved in the Replacement process with the Cleveland Browns (also 2-1), discovered 11 members of the Packers B Team on the regular roster when he took over the Packer chores. The group is headed by tackle Steve Collier and the efficient kicker, Max Zendejas.

Thus, it's possible that part of the footnote on the 1987 season will be in a Packer uniform in 1988.

THE BEARS?

IT'S NOT FUNNY

It is no longer amusing. . .

The Chicago Bears' domination of the NFC's Central Division, that is. The Midway Monsters have won the division championship four years in a row, a situation their rivals are beginning to find monotonous as they move into the 1988 season.

Could this, at long last, be the year the Bruins falter?

The Vikings, it's safe to assume, are of this persuasion. They are convinced they could have mounted a major challenge to the Bears' reign last season had there not been a player strike. Their reasoning is based upon the fact they lost all three replacement games they played--and finished three games back of Chicago (11-4) in the Central race with an 8-7 record.

Be that as it may, not since the '70s–when the Vikings were perennial kingpins–has one team dominated the division the way the Bears have since they launched their four-year reign under Mike Ditka in 1984. Over this span, they have won 50 games while losing only 13.

Unfortunately for their CD brethren, the Chicagoans evinced few signs of vulnerability in 1987, sweeping their season series with three intra-divisional opponents –the Buccaneers, Vikings and Packers–and defeating Detroit in their only meeting with the Lions (the other was cancelled because of the strike).

The Vikings, however, have one substantial consolation. They possess the only all-time winning record in the division with 178 wins, 125 losses and 5 ties. The Bears, Lions, Packers and Bucs follow in that order.

In The Game Against Cystic Fibrosis, Winning IS Everything
Cystic Fibrosis kills children. It deprives them of their hopes... their dreams...their future. It takes them out of the game before they have a chance to play.
But for many, the game isn't over...and there's still a chance. You are a key player...and it's time for you to go in and make a contribution. Time for you to run up the score against Cystic Fibrosis.
Join the Green Bay Packer's 65 Roses Club now. TODAY. Because we can still win. And because it means so much.

Packers Make Cycle With Visit To Miami

The Packers will complete the cycle in 1988, in a manner of speaking.

When they invade the Miami area the afternoon of September 18 to take on Don Shula's Dolphins, they will be paying their first visit to the palatial new Joe Robbie Stadium (pictured at right), the National Football League's latest showplace.

With that appearance, the Packers will have played in every stadium the 69-year-old NFL has to offer.

Although the Cardinals will be playing in their new Phoenix area home this season for the first time, it will not be a new experience to the Packers. They already have performed in Sun Devil Stadium, now the Big Red's Arizona base, having faced the Denver Broncos there in a pre-season contest in August of 1987.

A spacious, $100,000,000 structure, Joe Robbie Stadium is located 16 miles northwest of downtown Miami. Opened for play on August 16, 1987, a night on which the Dolphins entertained the Chicago Bears, it has a seating capacity of 74,993, which will be taxed to the limit when Super Bowl XXIII is staged there next January 22nd.

The "Joe Robbie" visit, curiously enough, will be the first of two Florida appearances within a two-week span for the Packers. Just 14 days later, Sunday afternoon, October 2, they will find themselves arrayed against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in Tampa Stadium.

Before they get around to those assignments, the Packers will make some team history at home. On Sunday afternoon, September 4, they open their 1988 NFL schedule against the Los Angeles Rams in Green Bay's Lambeau Field, a confrontation which will mark the first time the Green and Gold have opened a season against the Rams in Green Bay since the latter transferred their franchise from Cleveland to the City of Angels in 1946.

It will be a historic meeting for another reason. Lindy Infante, who became the tenth head coach in Packer history last February, will be making his regular season debut in that role against the Rams.

The Packers also will be holding forth in "Lambeau" the following week, hosting Tampa Bay and their multi-talented quarterback, Vinny Testaverde.

The subsequent, third week excursion to Miami will serve as a prelude to an annual "happening"—the Chicago Bears' yearly invasion of Green Bay. It will be the 136th meeting in professional football's most celebrated rivalry, a feud which dates back to 1921.

Following the October 2 visit to Tampa Bay, the Packers will make their first Milwaukee appearance of '88, welcoming New England to County Stadium October 9.

Next will come two of the most imposing challenges of the season, beginning with an intra-divisional showdown against the Vikings.

A week later the Packers will return to Milwaukee County Stadium to entertain the team which ended the Vikings' playoff hopes en route to winning Super Bowl XXII—the world champion Washington Redskins.

This demanding parlay will be followed by a pair of road engagements–the Falcons October 30 at Atlanta, where the Packers will be performing for the first time since 1983, and against the Bills at Buffalo November 6.

After that Buffalo visit, the Packers will be afforded the luxury of two consecutive home appearances. The first will bring the Indianapolis Colts, AFC East Champions in 1987, to Lambeau Field Sunday noon, November 13, following which Infante's athletes will host the Detroit Lions at Milwaukee November 20.

It then will be back to living out of a suitcase with another pair of road contests. On November 27 they move into Chicago's Soldier Field, where newly-sodded grass has supplanted artificial turf, for the traditional late-season rematch with the Bears.

A week later, December 4, the Packers will be at the Pontiac Silverdome to meet the Detroit Lions for the second time within a three-week span. The Green and Gold then close out their home schedule in Lambeau Field against another formidable NFC rival, Minnesota, on Sunday, December 11.

Once that project is completed, the Packers will begin girding for their season finale—their first regular season visit to Phoenix, where they close out against the Cardinals, December 18.
